If such a notice is published, the regular timeline (or such timeline as previously extended under this paragraph) for publication of the final regulation shall be treated as having been extended for 1 additional year.

If the Secretary provides for an earlier effective date pursuant to this clause, the Secretary shall include in the issuance or publication of the substantive change a finding described in the first sentence, and a brief statement of the reasons for such finding.

“(2) EXPEDITED ACCESS TO JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a process under which a provider of services or supplier that furnishes an item or service or an individual entitled to benefits under part A or enrolled under part B, or both, who has filed an appeal under paragraph (1) may obtain access to judicial review when a review panel (described in subparagraph (D)), on its own motion or at the request of the appellant, determines that no entity in the administrative appeals process has the authority to decide the question of law or regulation relevant to the matters in controversy and that there is no material issue of fact in dispute. The appellant may make such request only once with respect to a question of law or regulation in a case of an appeal.

“(B) PROMPT DETERMINATIONS.—If, after or coincident with appropriately filing a request for an administrative hearing, the appellant requests a determination by the appropriate review panel that no review panel has the authority to decide the question of law or regulations relevant to the matters in controversy and that there is no material issue of fact in dispute and if such request is accompanied by the documents and materials as the appropriate review panel shall require for purposes of making such determination, such review panel shall make a determination on the request in writing within 60 days after the date such review panel receives the request and such accompanying documents and materials. Such a determination by such review panel shall be considered a final decision and not subject to review by the Secretary.

“(C) ACCESS TO JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—If the appropriate review panel—

“(I) determines that there are no material issues of fact in dispute and that the only issue is one of law or regulation that no review panel has the authority to decide; or

“(II) fails to make such determination within the period provided under subparagraph (B);

then the appellant may bring a civil action as described in this subparagraph.

“(ii) DEADLINE FOR FILING.—Such action shall be filed, in the case described in—

“(I) clause (i)(I), within 60 days of date of the determination described in such subparagraph; or “(II) clause (i)(II), within 60 days of the end of the period provided under subparagraph (B) for the determination.

“(iii) VENUE.—Such action shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the appellant is located (or, in the case of an action brought jointly by more than one applicant, the judicial district in which the greatest number of applicants are located) or in the district court for the District of Columbia.

“(iv) INTEREST ON AMOUNTS IN CONTROVERSY.—Where a provider of services or supplier seeks judicial review pursuant to this paragraph, the amount in controversy shall be subject to annual interest beginning on the first day of the first month beginning after the 60-day period as determined pursuant to clause (ii) and equal to the rate of interest on obligations issued for purchase by the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and by the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund for the month in which the civil action authorized under this paragraph is commenced, to be awarded by the reviewing court in favor of the prevailing party. No interest awarded pursuant to the preceding sentence shall be deemed income or cost for the purposes of determining reimbursement due providers of services or suppliers under this Act.

“(D) REVIEW PANELS.—For purposes of this subsection, a ‘review panel’ is a panel consisting of 3 members (who shall be administrative law judges, members of the Departmental Appeals Board, or qualified individuals associated with a qualified independent contractor (as defined in subsection (c)(2)) or with another independent entity) designated by the Secretary for purposes of making determinations under this paragraph.”.

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(B) An institution or agency described in subparagraph (A) that has filed for a hearing under subparagraph (A) shall have expedited access to judicial review under this subparagraph in the same manner as providers of services, suppliers, and individuals entitled to benefits under part A or enrolled under part B, or both, may obtain expedited access to judicial review under the process established under section 1869(b)(2). Nothing in this subparagraph shall be construed to affect the application of any remedy imposed under section 1819 during the pendency of an appeal under this subparagraph.”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to appeals filed on or after October 1, 2003.

(d) EXPEDITED REVIEW OF CERTAIN PROVIDER AGREEMENT DETERMINATIONS.—

(1) TERMINATION AND CERTAIN OTHER IMMEDIATE REMEDIES.—The Secretary shall develop and implement a process to expedite proceedings under sections 1866(h) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395cc(h)) in which the remedy of termination of participation, or a remedy described in clause (i) or (iii) of section 1819(h)(2)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(h)(2)(B)) which is applied on an immediate basis, has been imposed. Under such process priority shall be provided in cases of termination.

(2) INCREASED FINANCIAL SUPPORT.—In addition to any amounts otherwise appropriated, to reduce by 50 percent the average time for administrative determinations on appeals under section 1866(h) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395cc(h)), there are authorized to be appropriated (in appropriate part from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund) to the Secretary such additional sums for fiscal year 2004 and each subsequent fiscal year as may be necessary. The purposes for which such amounts are available include increasing the number of administrative law judges (and their staffs) and the appellate level staff at the Departmental Appeals Board of the Department of Health and Human Services and educating such judges and staffs on long-term care issues.

"(h) CONDUCT OF PREPAYMENT REVIEW.—

"(1) CONDUCT OF RANDOM PREPAYMENT REVIEW.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A medicare administrative contractor may conduct random prepayment review only to develop a contractor-wide or program-wide claims payment error rates or under such additional circumstances as may be provided under regulations, developed in consultation with providers of services and suppliers.

"(B) USE OF STANDARD PROTOCOLS WHEN CONDUCTING PREPAYMENT REVIEWS.—When a medicare administrative contractor conducts a random prepayment review, the contractor may conduct such review only in accordance with a standard protocol for random prepayment audits developed by the Secretary.

"(C) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as preventing the denial of payments for claims actually reviewed under a random prepayment review.

"(D) RANDOM PREPAYMENT REVIEW.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'random prepayment review' means a demand for the production of records or documentation absent cause with respect to a claim.

"(2) LIMITATIONS ON NON-RANDOM PREPAYMENT REVIEW.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS ON INITIATION OF NON-RANDOM PREPAYMENT REVIEW.—A medicare administrative contractor may not initiate non-random prepayment review of a provider of services or supplier based on the initial identification by that provider of services or supplier of an improper billing practice unless there is a likelihood of sustained or high level of payment error (as defined in subsection (i)(3)(A)).

"(B) TERMINATION OF NON-RANDOM PREPAYMENT REVIEW.—The Secretary shall issue regulations relating to the termination, including termination dates, of non-random prepayment review. Such regulations may vary such a termination date based upon the differences in the circumstances triggering prepayment review."

SEC. 835. RECOVERY OF OVERPAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1893 (42 U.S.C. 1395ddd) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(1) USE OF REPAYMENT PLANS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If the repayment, within 30 days by a provider of services or supplier, of an overpayment under this title would constitute a hardship (as defined in subparagraph (B)), subject to subparagraph (C), upon request of the provider of services or supplier the Secretary shall enter into a plan with the provider of services or supplier for the repayment (through offset or otherwise) of such overpayment over a period of at least 6 months but not longer than 3 years (or not longer than 5 years in the case of extreme hardship, as determined by the Secretary). Interest shall accrue on the balance through the period of repayment. Such plan shall meet terms and conditions determined to be appropriate by the Secretary.

“(B) HARDSHIP.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the repayment of an overpayment (or overpayments) within 30 days is deemed to constitute a hardship if—

“(I) in the case of a provider of services that files cost reports, the aggregate amount of the overpayments exceeds 10 percent of the amount paid under this title to the provider of services for the cost reporting period covered by the most recently submitted cost report; or

“(II) in the case of another provider of services or supplier, the aggregate amount of the overpayments exceeds 10 percent of the amount paid under this title to the provider of services or supplier for the previous calendar year.

“(ii) RULE OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall establish rules for the application of this subparagraph in the case of a provider of services or supplier that was not paid under this title during the previous year or was paid under this title only during a portion of that year.

“(iii) TREATMENT OF PREVIOUS OVERPAYMENTS.—If a provider of services or supplier has entered into a repayment plan under subparagraph (A) with respect to a specific overpayment amount, such payment amount under the repayment plan shall not be taken into account under clause (i) with respect to subsequent overpayment amounts.

“(C) EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if—

“(i) the Secretary has reason to suspect that the provider of services or supplier may file for bankruptcy or otherwise cease to do business or discontinue participation in the program under this title; or

“(ii) there is an indication of fraud or abuse committed against the program.

“(D) IMMEDIATE COLLECTION IF VIOLATION OF REPAYMENT PLAN.—If a provider of services or supplier fails to make a payment in accordance with a repayment plan under this paragraph, the Secretary may immediately seek to offset or otherwise recover the total balance outstanding (including applicable interest) under the repayment plan.

“(E) RELATION TO NO FAULT PROVISION.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as affecting the application of section 1870(c) (relating to no adjustment in the cases of certain overpayments).

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a provider of services or supplier that is determined to have received an overpayment under this title and that seeks a reconsideration by a qualified independent contractor on such determination under section 1869(b)(1), the Secretary may not take any action (or authorize any other person, including any medicare contractor, as defined in subparagraph (C)) to recoup the overpayment until the date the decision on the reconsideration has been rendered. If the provisions of section 1869(b)(1) (providing for such a reconsideration by a qualified independent contractor) are not in effect, in applying the previous sentence any reference to such a reconsideration shall be treated as a reference to a redetermination by the fiscal intermediary or carrier involved.

“(B) COLLECTION WITH INTEREST.—Insofar as the determination on such appeal is against the provider of services or supplier, interest on the overpayment shall accrue on and after the date of the original notice of overpayment. Insofar as such determination against the provider of services or supplier is later reversed, the Secretary shall provide for repayment of the amount recouped plus interest at the same rate as would apply under the previous sentence for the period in which the amount was recouped.

“(C) MEDICARE CONTRACTOR DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘medicare contractor’ has the meaning given such term in section 1889(g).

“(3) LIMITATION ON USE OF EXTRAPOLATION.—A medicare contractor may not use extrapolation to determine overpayment amounts to be recovered by recoupment, offset, or otherwise unless—

“(A) there is a sustained or high level of payment error (as defined by the Secretary by regulation); or

“(B) documented educational intervention has failed to correct the payment error (as determined by the Secretary).

“(4) PROVISION OF SUPPORTING DOCUMENTATION.—In the case of a provider of services or supplier with respect to which amounts were previously overpaid, a medicare contractor may request the periodic production of records or supporting documentation for a limited sample of submitted claims to ensure that the previous practice is not continuing.

“(5) CONSENT SETTLEMENT REFORMS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may use a consent settlement (as defined in subparagraph (D)) to settle a projected overpayment.

“(B) OPPORTUNITY TO SUBMIT ADDITIONAL INFORMATION BEFORE CONSENT SETTLEMENT OFFER.—Before offering a provider of services or supplier a consent settlement, the Secretary shall—

“(i) communicate to the provider of services or supplier—

“(I) that, based on a review of the medical records requested by the Secretary, a preliminary evaluation of those records indicates that there would be an overpayment;

“(II) the nature of the problems identified in such evaluation; and

“(III) the steps that the provider of services or supplier should take to address the problems; and

“(ii) provide for a 45-day period during which the provider of services or supplier may furnish additional information concerning the medical records for the claims that had been reviewed.

“(C) CONSENT SETTLEMENT OFFER.—The Secretary shall review any additional information furnished by the provider of services or supplier under subparagraph (B)(ii). Taking into consideration such information, the Secretary shall determine if there still appears to be an overpayment. If so, the Secretary—

“(i) shall provide notice of such determination to the provider of services or supplier, including an explanation of the reason for such determination; and

“(ii) in order to resolve the overpayment, may offer the provider of services or supplier—

“(I) the opportunity for a statistically valid random sample; or

“(II) a consent settlement.

The opportunity provided under clause (ii)(I) does not waive any appeal rights with respect to the alleged overpayment involved.

“(D) CONSENT SETTLEMENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘consent settlement’ means an agreement between the Secretary and a provider of services or supplier whereby both parties agree to settle a projected overpayment based on less than a statistically valid sample of claims and the provider of services or supplier agrees not to appeal the claims involved.

“(6) NOTICE OF OVER-UTILIZATION OF CODES.—The Secretary shall establish, in consultation with organizations representing the classes of providers of services and suppliers, a process under which the Secretary provides for notice to classes of providers of services and suppliers served by the contractor in cases in which the contractor has identified that particular billing codes may be overutilized by that class of providers of services or suppliers under the programs under this title (or provisions of title XI insofar as they relate to such programs).

“(7) PAYMENT AUDITS.—

“(A) WRITTEN NOTICE FOR POST-PAYMENT AUDITS.—Subject to subparagraph (C), if a medicare contractor decides to conduct a post-payment audit of a provider of services or supplier under this title, the contractor shall provide the provider of services or supplier with written notice (which may be in electronic form) of the intent to conduct such an audit.

“(a) REQUIREMENTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this part and part C, the term ‘qualified prescription drug coverage’ means either of the following:

“(A) STANDARD COVERAGE WITH ACCESS TO NEGOTIATED PRICES.—Standard coverage (as defined in subsection (b)) and access to negotiated prices under subsection (d).

“(B) ACTUARIALLY EQUIVALENT COVERAGE WITH ACCESS TO NEGOTIATED PRICES.—Coverage of covered outpatient drugs which meets the alternative coverage requirements of subsection (c) and access to negotiated prices under subsection (d), but only if it is approved by the Administrator, as provided under subsection (c).

“(2) PERMITTING ADDITIONAL OUTPATIENT PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), nothing in this part shall be construed as preventing qualified prescription drug coverage from including coverage of covered outpatient drugs that exceeds the coverage required under paragraph (1), but any such additional coverage shall be limited to coverage of covered outpatient drugs.

“(B) DISAPPROVAL AUTHORITY.—The Administrator shall review the offering of qualified prescription drug coverage under this part or part C. If the Administrator finds that, in the case of a qualified prescription drug coverage under a prescription drug plan or a Medicare+Choice plan, that the organization or sponsor offering the coverage is engaged in activities intended to discourage enrollment of classes of eligible medicare beneficiaries obtaining coverage through the plan on the basis of their higher likelihood of utilizing prescription drug coverage, the Administrator may terminate the contract with the sponsor or organization under this part or part C.

“(3) APPLICATION OF SECONDARY PAYOR PROVISIONS.—The provisions of section 1852(a)(4) shall apply under this part in the same manner as they apply under part C.

“(b) STANDARD COVERAGE.—For purposes of this part, the ‘standard coverage’ is coverage of covered outpatient drugs (as defined in subsection (f)) that meets the following requirements:

“(1) DEDUCTIBLE.—The coverage has an annual deductible—

“(A) for 2005, that is equal to $250; or

“(B) for a subsequent year, that is equal to the amount specified under this paragraph for the previous year increased by the percentage specified in paragraph (5) for the year involved.

Any amount determined under subparagraph (B) that is not a multiple of $10 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $10.

“(2) LIMITS ON COST-SHARING.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The coverage has cost-sharing (for costs above the annual deductible specified in paragraph (1) and up to the initial coverage limit under paragraph (3)) as follows:

“(i) FIRST COPAYMENT RANGE.—For costs above the annual deductible specified in paragraph (1) and up to amount specified in subparagraph (C), the cost-sharing—

“(I) is equal to 20 percent; or

“(II) is actuarially equivalent (using processes established under subsection (e)) to an average expected payment of 20 percent of such costs.

“(ii) SECONDARY COPAYMENT RANGE.—For costs above the amount specified in subparagraph (C) and up to the initial coverage limit, the cost-sharing—

“(I) is equal to 50 percent; or

“(II) is actuarially consistent (using processes established under subsection (e)) with an average expected payment of 50 percent of such costs.

“(B) USE OF TIERED COPAYMENTS.—Nothing in this part shall be construed as preventing a PDP sponsor from applying tiered copayments, so long as such tiered copayments are consistent with subparagraph (A).

“(C) INITIAL COPAYMENT THRESHOLD.—The amount specified in this subparagraph—

“(i) for 2005, is equal to $1,000; or

“(ii) for a subsequent year, is equal to the amount specified in this subparagraph for the previous year, increased by the annual percentage increase described in paragraph (5) for the year involved.

Any amount determined under clause (ii) that is not a multiple of $10 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $10.

“(3) INITIAL COVERAGE LIMIT.—Subject to paragraph (4), the coverage has an initial coverage limit on the maximum costs that may be recognized for payment purposes—

“(A) for 2005, that is equal to $2,000; or

“(B) for a subsequent year, that is equal to the amount specified in this paragraph for the previous year, increased by the annual percentage increase described in paragraph (5) for the year involved.

Any amount determined under subparagraph (B) that is not a multiple of $25 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $25.

“(4) CATASTROPHIC PROTECTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (3), the coverage provides benefits with no cost-sharing after the individual has incurred costs (as described in subparagraph (C)) for covered outpatient drugs in a year equal to the annual out-of-pocket threshold specified in subparagraph (B).

“(B) ANNUAL OUT-OF-POCKET THRESHOLD.—For purposes of this part, the ‘annual out-of-pocket threshold’ specified in this subparagraph—

“(i) for 2005, is equal to $3,700; or

“(ii) for a subsequent year, is equal to the amount specified in this subparagraph for the previous year, increased by the annual percentage increase described in paragraph (5) for the year involved.

Any amount determined under clause (ii) that is not a multiple of $100 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $100.

“(C) APPLICATION.—In applying subparagraph (A)—

“(i) incurred costs shall only include costs incurred for the annual deductible (described in paragraph (1)), cost-sharing (described in paragraph (2)), and amounts for which benefits are not provided because of the application of the initial coverage limit described in paragraph (3); and “(ii) such costs shall be treated as incurred only if they are paid by the individual (or by another individual, such as a family member, on behalf of the individual), under section 1860G, or under title XIX and the individual (or other individual) is not reimbursed through insurance or otherwise, a group health plan, or other third-party payment arrangement for such costs.

“(5) ANNUAL PERCENTAGE INCREASE.—For purposes of this part, the annual percentage increase specified in this paragraph for a year is equal to the annual percentage increase in average per capita aggregate expenditures for covered outpatient drugs in the United States for medicare beneficiaries, as determined by the Administrator for the 12-month period ending in July of the previous year.

“(c) ALTERNATIVE COVERAGE REQUIREMENTS.—A prescription drug plan or Medicare+Choice plan may provide a different prescription drug benefit design from the standard coverage described in subsection (b) so long as the Administrator determines (based on an actuarial analysis by the Administrator) that the following requirements are met and the plan applies for, and receives, the approval of the Administrator for such benefit design:

“(1) ASSURING AT LEAST ACTUARIALLY EQUIVALENT COVERAGE.—

“(A) ASSURING EQUIVALENT VALUE OF TOTAL COVERAGE.—The actuarial value of the total coverage (as determined under subsection (e)) is at least equal to the actuarial value (as so determined) of standard coverage.

“(B) ASSURING EQUIVALENT UNSUBSIDIZED VALUE OF COVERAGE.—The unsubsidized value of the coverage is at least equal to the unsubsidized value of standard coverage. For purposes of this subparagraph, the unsubsidized value of coverage is the amount by which the actuarial value of the coverage (as determined under subsection (e)) exceeds the actuarial value of the subsidy payments under section 1860H with respect to such coverage.

“(C) ASSURING STANDARD PAYMENT FOR COSTS AT INITIAL COVERAGE LIMIT.—The coverage is designed, based upon an actuarially representative pattern of utilization (as determined under subsection (e)), to provide for the payment, with respect to costs incurred that are equal to the initial coverage limit under subsection (b)(3), of an amount equal to at least the sum of the following products:

“(i) FIRST COPAYMENT RANGE.—The product of—

“(I) the amount by which the initial copayment threshold described in subsection (b)(2)(C) exceeds the deductible described in subsection (b)(1); and

“(II) 100 percent minus the cost-sharing percentage specified in subsection (b)(2)(A)(i)(I).

“(ii) SECONDARY COPAYMENT RANGE.—The product of—

“(I) the amount by which the initial coverage limit described in subsection (b)(3) exceeds the initial copayment threshold described in subsection (b)(2)(C); and

“(II) 100 percent minus the cost-sharing percentage specified in subsection (b)(2)(A)(i)(I).

“(2) CATASTROPHIC PROTECTION.—The coverage provides for beneficiaries the catastrophic protection described in subsection (b)(4).

“(d) ACCESS TO NEGOTIATED PRICES.—

or a Medicare+Choice organization, the sponsor or organization shall provide beneficiaries with access to negotiated prices (including applicable discounts) used for payment for covered outpatient drugs, regardless of the fact that no benefits may be payable under the coverage with respect to such drugs because of the application of cost-sharing or an initial coverage limit (described in subsection (b)(3)). Insofar as a State elects to provide medical assistance under title XIX for a drug based on the prices negotiated by a prescription drug plan under this part, the requirements of section 1927 shall not apply to such drugs. The prices negotiated by a prescription drug plan under this part, by a Medicare+Choice plan with respect to covered outpatient drugs, or by a qualified retiree prescription drug plan (as defined in section 1860H(f)(1)) with respect to such drugs on behalf of individuals entitled to benefits under part A or enrolled under part B, shall (notwithstanding any other provision of law) not be taken into account for the purposes of establishing the best price under section 1927(c)(1)(C).

“(2) DISCLOSURE.—The PDP sponsor or Medicare+Choice organization shall disclose to the Administrator (in a manner specified by the Administrator) the extent to which discounts or rebates made available to the sponsor or organization by a manufacturer are passed through to enrollees through pharmacies and other dispensers or otherwise. The provisions of section 1927(b)(3)(D) shall apply to information disclosed to the Administrator under this paragraph in the same manner as such provisions apply to information disclosed under such section.

“(e) ACTUARIAL VALUATION; DETERMINATION OF ANNUAL PERCENTAGE INCREASES.—

“(1) PROCESSES.—For purposes of this section, the Administrator shall establish processes and methods—

“(A) for determining the actuarial valuation of prescription drug coverage, including—

“(i) an actuarial valuation of standard coverage and of the reinsurance subsidy payments under section 1860H;

“(ii) the use of generally accepted actuarial principles and methodologies; and

“(iii) applying the same methodology for determinations of alternative coverage under subsection (c) as is used with respect to determinations of standard coverage under subsection (b); and

“(B) for determining annual percentage increases described in subsection (b)(5).

“(2) USE OF OUTSIDE ACTUARIES.—Under the processes under paragraph (1)(A), PDP sponsors and Medicare+Choice organizations may use actuarial opinions certified by independent, qualified actuaries to establish actuarial values, but the Administrator shall determine whether such actuarial values meet the requirements under subsection (c)(1).

“(f) COVERED OUTPATIENT DRUGS DEFINED.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, for purposes of this part, the term ‘covered outpatient drug’ means—

“(A) a drug that may be dispensed only upon a prescription and that is described in subparagraph (A)(i) or (A)(ii) of section 1927(k)(2); or

“(B) a biological product described in clauses (i) through (iii) of subparagraph (B) of such section or insulin described in subparagraph (C) of such section, and such term includes a vaccine licensed under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act and any use of a covered outpatient drug for a medically accepted indication (as defined in section 1927(k)(6)).

“(2) EXCLUSIONS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Such term does not include drugs or classes of drugs, or their medical uses, which may be excluded from coverage or otherwise restricted under section 1927(d)(2), other than subparagraph (E) thereof (relating to smoking cessation agents), or under section 1927(d)(3).

“(B) AVOIDANCE OF DUPLICATE COVERAGE.—A drug prescribed for an individual that would otherwise be a covered outpatient drug under this part shall not be so considered if payment for such drug is available under part A or B for an individual entitled to benefits under part A and enrolled under part B.

“(3) APPLICATION OF FORMULARY RESTRICTIONS.—A drug prescribed for an individual that would otherwise be a covered outpatient drug under this part shall not be so considered under a plan if the plan excludes the drug under a formulary and such exclusion is not successfully appealed under section 1860C(f)(2).

“(4) APPLICATION OF GENERAL EXCLUSION PROVISIONS.—A prescription drug plan or Medicare+Choice plan may exclude from qualified prescription drug coverage any covered outpatient drug—

“(A) for which payment would not be made if section 1862(a) applied to part D; or “(B) which are not prescribed in accordance with the plan or this part.

Such exclusions are determinations subject to reconsideration and appeal pursuant to section 1860C(f).

“SEC. 1860C. BENEFICIARY PROTECTIONS FOR QUALIFIED PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE.

“(a) GUARANTEED ISSUE, COMMUNITY-RATED PREMIUMS, ACCESS TO NEGOTIATED PRICES, AND NONDISCRIMINATION.—For provisions requiring guaranteed issue, community-rated premiums, access to negotiated prices, and nondiscrimination, see sections 1860A(c)(1), 1860A(c)(2), 1860B(d), and 1860F(b), respectively.

“(b) DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—

“(1) GENERAL INFORMATION.—A PDP sponsor shall disclose, in a clear, accurate, and standardized form to each enrollee with a prescription drug plan offered by the sponsor under this part at the time of enrollment and at least annually thereafter, the information described in section 1852(c)(1) relating to such plan. Such information includes the following:

“(A) Access to covered outpatient drugs, including access through pharmacy networks.

“(B) How any formulary used by the sponsor functions, including the drugs included in the formulary.

“(C) Co-payments and deductible requirements, including the identification of the tiered or other co-payment level applicable to each drug (or class of drugs).

“(D) Grievance and appeals procedures.

Such information shall also be made available on request to prospective enrollees during annual open enrollment periods.

“(2) DISCLOSURE UPON REQUEST OF GENERAL COVERAGE, UTILIZATION, AND GRIEVANCE INFORMATION.—Upon request of an individual eligible to enroll under a prescription drug plan, the PDP sponsor shall provide the information described in section 1852(c)(2) (other than subparagraph (D)) to such individual.

“(3) RESPONSE TO BENEFICIARY QUESTIONS.—Each PDP sponsor offering a prescription drug plan shall have a mechanism for providing specific information to enrollees upon request. The sponsor shall make available on a timely basis, through an Internet website and in writing upon request, information on specific changes in its formulary.

“(4) CLAIMS INFORMATION.—Each PDP sponsor offering a prescription drug plan must furnish to enrolled individuals in a form easily understandable to such individuals an explanation of benefits (in accordance with section 1806(a) or in a comparable manner) and a notice of the benefits in relation to initial coverage limit and annual out-of-pocket threshold for the current year, whenever prescription drug benefits are provided under this part (except that such notice need not be provided more often than monthly).

“(c) ACCESS TO COVERED BENEFITS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The PDP sponsor of the prescription drug plan shall secure the participation in its network of a sufficient number of pharmacies that dispense (other than by mail order) drugs directly to patients to ensure convenient access (as determined by the Administrator and including adequate emergency access) for enrolled beneficiaries, in accordance with standards established under section 1860D(e) that ensure such convenient access.

“(B) USE OF POINT-OF-SERVICE SYSTEM.—A PDP sponsor shall establish an optional point-of-service method of operation under which—

“(i) the plan provides access to any or all pharmacies that are not participating pharmacies in its network; and “(ii) the plan may charge beneficiaries through adjustments in premiums and copayments any additional costs associated with the point-of-service option.

The additional copayments so charged shall not count toward the application of section 1860B(b).

“(2) USE OF STANDARDIZED TECHNOLOGY.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The PDP sponsor of a prescription drug plan shall issue (and re-issue, as appropriate) such a card (or other technology) that may be used by an enrolled beneficiary to assure access to negotiated prices under section 1860B(d) for the purchase of prescription drugs for which coverage is not otherwise provided under the prescription drug plan.

“(B) STANDARDS.—

“(i) DEVELOPMENT.—The Administrator shall provide for the development of national standards relating to a standardized format for the card or other technology referred to in subparagraph (A). Such standards shall be compatible with standards established under part C of title XI.

“(ii) APPLICATION OF ADVISORY TASK FORCE.—The advisory task force established under subsection (d)(3)(B)(ii) shall provide recommendations to the Administrator under such subsection regarding the standards developed under clause (i).

“(3) REQUIREMENTS ON DEVELOPMENT AND APPLICATION OF FORMULARIES.—If a PDP sponsor of a prescription drug plan uses a formulary, the following requirements must be met:

“(A) PHARMACY AND THERAPEUTIC (P&T) COMMITTEE.—The sponsor must establish a pharmacy and therapeutic committee that develops and reviews the formulary. Such committee shall include at least one practicing physician and at least one practicing pharmacist both with expertise in the care of elderly or disabled persons and a majority of its members shall consist of individuals who are a practicing physician or a practicing pharmacist (or both).

“(B) FORMULARY DEVELOPMENT.—In developing and reviewing the formulary, the committee shall base clinical decisions on the strength of scientific evidence and standards of practice, including assessing peer-reviewed medical literature, such as randomized clinical trials, pharmacoeconomic studies, outcomes research data, and such other information as the committee determines to be appropriate.

“(C) INCLUSION OF DRUGS IN ALL THERAPEUTIC CATEGORIES.—The formulary must include drugs within each therapeutic category and class of covered outpatient drugs (although not necessarily for all drugs within such categories and classes).

“(D) PROVIDER EDUCATION.—The committee shall establish policies and procedures to educate and inform health care providers concerning the formulary.

“(E) NOTICE BEFORE REMOVING DRUGS FROM FORMULARY.—Any removal of a drug from a formulary shall take effect only after appropriate notice is made available to beneficiaries and physicians.

“(F) GRIEVANCES AND APPEALS RELATING TO APPLICATION OF FORMULARIES.—For provisions relating to grievances and appeals of coverage, see subsections (e) and (f).

“(d) COST AND UTILIZATION MANAGEMENT; QUALITY ASSURANCE; MEDICATION THERAPY MANAGEMENT PROGRAM.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The PDP sponsor shall have in place with respect to covered outpatient drugs—

“(A) an effective cost and drug utilization management program, including medically appropriate incentives to use generic drugs and therapeutic interchange, when appropriate;

“(B) quality assurance measures and systems to reduce medical errors and adverse drug interactions, including a medication therapy management program described in paragraph (2) and for years beginning with 2006, an electronic prescription program described in paragraph (3); and

“(C) a program to control fraud, abuse, and waste.

Nothing in this section shall be construed as impairing a PDP sponsor from applying cost management tools (including differential payments) under all methods of operation.

“(2) MEDICATION THERAPY MANAGEMENT PROGRAM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A medication therapy management program described in this paragraph is a program of drug therapy management and medication administration that is designed to assure, with respect to beneficiaries with chronic diseases (such as diabetes, asthma, hypertension, and congestive heart failure) or multiple prescriptions, that covered outpatient drugs under the prescription drug plan are appropriately used to achieve therapeutic goals and reduce the risk of adverse events, including adverse drug interactions.

“(B) ELEMENTS.—Such program may include—

“(i) enhanced beneficiary understanding of such appropriate use through beneficiary education, counseling, and other appropriate means;

“(ii) increased beneficiary adherence with prescription medication regimens through medication refill reminders, special packaging, and other appropriate means; and

“(iii) detection of patterns of overuse and underuse of prescription drugs.

“(C) DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAM IN COOPERATION WITH LICENSED PHARMACISTS.—The program shall be developed in cooperation with licensed and practicing pharmacists and physicians.

“(D) CONSIDERATIONS IN PHARMACY FEES.—The PDP sponsor of a prescription drug program shall take into account, in establishing fees for pharmacists and others providing services under the medication therapy management program, the resources and time used in implementing the program.

“(3) ELECTRONIC PRESCRIPTION PROGRAM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—An electronic prescription drug program described in this paragraph is a program that includes at least the following components, consistent with national standards established under subparagraph (B):

“(i) ELECTRONIC TRANSMITTAL OF PRESCRIPTIONS.—Prescriptions are only received electronically, except in emergency cases and other exceptional circumstances recognized by the Administrator.

“(ii) PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO PRESCRIBING HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.—The program provides, upon transmittal of a prescription by a prescribing health care professional, for transmittal by the pharmacist to the professional of information that includes—

“(I) information (to the extent available and feasible) on the drugs being prescribed for that patient and other information relating to the medical history or condition of the patient that may be relevant to the appropriate prescription for that patient;

“(II) cost-effective alternatives (if any) for the use of the drug prescribed; and “(III) information on the drugs included in the applicable formulary.

To the extent feasible, such program shall permit the prescribing health care professional to provide (and be provided) related information on an interactive, real-time basis.

“(B) STANDARDS.—

“(i) DEVELOPMENT.—The Administrator shall provide for the development of national standards relating to the electronic prescription drug program described in subparagraph (A). Such standards shall be compatible with standards established under part C of title XI.

“(ii) ADVISORY TASK FORCE.—In developing such standards and the standards described in subsection (c)(2)(B)(i) the Administrator shall establish a task force that includes representatives of physicians, hospitals, pharmacists, and technology experts and representatives of the Departments of Veterans Affairs and Defense and other appropriate Federal agencies to provide recommendations to the Administrator on such standards, including recommendations relating to the following:

“(I) The range of available computerized prescribing software and hardware and their costs to develop and implement.

“(II) The extent to which such systems reduce medication errors and can be readily implemented by physicians and hospitals.

“(III) Efforts to develop a common software platform for computerized prescribing.

“(IV) The cost of implementing such systems in the range of hospital and physician office settings, including hardware, software, and training costs.

“(V) Implementation issues as they relate to part C of title XI, and current Federal and State prescribing laws and regulations and their impact on implementation of computerized prescribing.

“(iii) DEADLINES.—

“(I) The Administrator shall constitute the task force under clause (ii) by not later than April 1, 2003.

“(II) Such task force shall submit recommendations to Administrator by not later than January 1, 2004.

“(III) The Administrator shall develop and promulgate the national standards referred to in clause (ii) by not later than January 1, 2005.

“(C) REFERENCE TO AVAILABILITY OF GRANT FUNDS.—Grant funds are authorized under section 399O of the Public Health Service Act to provide assistance to health care providers in implementing electronic prescription drug programs.

“(4) TREATMENT OF ACCREDITATION.—Section 1852(e)(4) (relating to treatment of accreditation) shall apply to prescription drug plans under this part with respect to the following requirements, in the same manner as they apply to Medicare+Choice plans under part C with respect to the requirements described in a clause of section 1852(e)(4)(B):

“(A) Paragraph (1) (including quality assurance), including medication therapy management program under paragraph (2).

“(B) Subsection (c)(1) (relating to access to covered benefits).

“(C) Subsection (g) (relating to confidentiality and accuracy of enrollee records).

“(5) PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF PHARMACEUTICAL PRICES FOR EQUIVALENT DRUGS.—Each PDP sponsor shall provide that each pharmacy or other dispenser that arranges for the dispensing of a covered outpatient drug shall inform the beneficiary at the time of purchase of the drug of any differential between the price of the prescribed drug to the enrollee and the price of the lowest cost generic drug covered under the plan that is therapeutically equivalent and bioequivalent.

“(e) GRIEVANCE MECHANISM, COVERAGE DETERMINATIONS, AND RECONSIDERATIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each PDP sponsor shall provide meaningful procedures for hearing and resolving grievances between the organization (including any entity or individual through which the sponsor provides covered benefits) and enrollees with prescription drug plans of the sponsor under this part in accordance with section 1852(f).

“(2) APPLICATION OF COVERAGE DETERMINATION AND RECONSIDERATION PROVISIONS.—A PDP sponsor shall meet the requirements of paragraphs (1) through (3) of section 1852(g) with respect to covered benefits under the prescription drug plan it offers under this part in the same manner as such requirements apply to a Medicare+Choice organization with respect to benefits it offers under a Medicare+Choice plan under part C.

“(3) REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF TIERED FORMULARY DETERMINATIONS.—In the case of a prescription drug plan offered by a PDP sponsor that provides for tiered cost-sharing for drugs included within a formulary and provides lower cost-sharing for preferred drugs included within the formulary, an individual who is enrolled in the plan may request coverage of a nonpreferred drug under the terms applicable for preferred drugs if the prescribing physician determines that the preferred drug for treatment of the same condition is not as effective for the individual or has adverse effects for the individual.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), a PDP sponsor shall meet the requirements of paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 1852(g) with respect to drugs not included on any formulary in the same manner as such requirements apply to a Medicare+Choice organization with respect to benefits it offers under a Medicare+Choice plan under part C.

“(2) FORMULARY DETERMINATIONS.—An individual who is enrolled in a prescription drug plan offered by a PDP sponsor may appeal to obtain coverage for a covered outpatient drug that is not on a formulary of the sponsor if the prescribing physician determines that the formulary drug for treatment of the same condition is not as effective for the individual or has adverse effects for the individual.

“(g) CONFIDENTIALITY AND ACCURACY OF ENROLLEE RECORDS.—A PDP sponsor shall meet the requirements of section 1852(h) with respect to enrollees under this part in the same manner as such requirements apply to a Medicare+Choice organization with respect to enrollees under part C.

“SEC. 1860D. REQUIREMENTS FOR PRESCRIPTION DRUG PLAN (PDP) SPONSORS; CONTRACTS; ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS.

“(a) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—Each PDP sponsor of a prescription drug plan shall meet the following requirements:

“(1) LICENSURE.—Subject to subsection (c), the sponsor is organized and licensed under State law as a risk-bearing entity eligible to offer health insurance or health benefits coverage in each State in which it offers a prescription drug plan.

“(2) ASSUMPTION OF FINANCIAL RISK FOR UNSUBSIDIZED COVERAGE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B) and section 1860E(d)(2), the entity assumes full financial risk on a prospective basis for qualified prescription drug coverage that it offers under a prescription drug plan and that is not covered under section 1860H.

“(B) REINSURANCE PERMITTED.—The entity may obtain insurance or make other arrangements for the cost of coverage provided to any enrolled member under this part.

“(3) SOLVENCY FOR UNLICENSED SPONSORS.—In the case of a sponsor that is not described in paragraph (1), the sponsor shall meet solvency standards established by the Administrator under subsection (d).

“(b) CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall not permit the election under section 1860A of a prescription drug plan offered by a PDP sponsor under this part, and the sponsor shall not be eligible for payments under section 1860G or 1860H, unless the Administrator has entered into a contract under this subsection with the sponsor with respect to the offering of such plan. Such a contract with a sponsor may cover more than one prescription drug plan. Such contract shall provide that the sponsor agrees to comply with the applicable requirements and standards of this part and the terms and conditions of payment as provided for in this part.

“(2) NEGOTIATION REGARDING TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Administrator shall have the same authority to negotiate the terms and conditions of prescription drug plans under this part as the Director of the Office of Personnel Management has with respect to health benefits plans under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code. In negotiating the terms and conditions regarding premiums for which information is submitted under section 1860F(a)(2), the Administrator shall take into account the subsidy payments under section 1860H and the adjusted community rate (as defined in section 1854(f)(3)) for the benefits covered.

“(3) INCORPORATION OF CERTAIN MEDICARE+CHOICE CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS.—The following provisions of section 1857 shall apply, subject to subsection (c)(5), to contracts under this section in the same manner as they apply to contracts under section 1857(a):

“(A) MINIMUM ENROLLMENT.—Paragraphs (1) and (3) of section 1857(b).

“(B) CONTRACT PERIOD AND EFFECTIVENESS.—Paragraphs (1) through (3) and (5) of section 1857(c).

“(C) PROTECTIONS AGAINST FRAUD AND BENEFICIARY PROTECTIONS.—Section 1857(d).

“(D) ADDITIONAL CONTRACT TERMS.—Section 1857(e); except that in applying section 1857(e)(2) under this part—

“(i) such section shall be applied separately to costs relating to this part (from costs under part C);

“(ii) in no case shall the amount of the fee established under this subparagraph for a plan exceed 20 percent of the maximum amount of the fee that may be established under subparagraph (B) of such section; and

“(iii) no fees shall be applied under this subparagraph with respect to Medicare+Choice plans.

“(E) INTERMEDIATE SANCTIONS.—Section 1857(g).

“(F) PROCEDURES FOR TERMINATION.—Section 1857(h).

“(4) RULES OF APPLICATION FOR INTERMEDIATE SANCTIONS.—In applying paragraph (3)(E)—

“(A) the reference in section 1857(g)(1)(B) to section 1854 is deemed a reference to this part; and

“(B) the reference in section 1857(g)(1)(F) to section 1852(k)(2)(A)(ii) shall not be applied.

“(c) WAIVER OF CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS TO EXPAND CHOICE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an entity that seeks to offer a prescription drug plan in a State, the Administrator shall waive the requirement of subsection (a)(1) that the entity be licensed in that State if the Administrator determines, based on the application and other evidence presented to the Administrator, that any of the grounds for approval of the application described in paragraph (2) has been met.

“(2) GROUNDS FOR APPROVAL.—The grounds for approval under this paragraph are the grounds for approval described in subparagraph (B), (C), and (D) of section 1855(a)(2), and also include the application by a State of any grounds other than those required under Federal law.

“(3) APPLICATION OF WAIVER PROCEDURES.—With respect to an application for a waiver (or a waiver granted) under this subsection, the provisions of subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G) of section 1855(a)(2) shall apply.

“(4) LICENSURE DOES NOT SUBSTITUTE FOR OR CONSTITUTE CERTIFICATION.—The fact that an entity is licensed in accordance with subsection (a)(1) does not deem the entity to meet other requirements imposed under this part for a PDP sponsor.

“(5) REFERENCES TO CERTAIN PROVISIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, in applying provisions of section 1855(a)(2) under this subsection to prescription drug plans and PDP sponsors—

“(A) any reference to a waiver application under section 1855 shall be treated as a reference to a waiver application under paragraph (1); and

“(B) any reference to solvency standards shall be treated as a reference to solvency standards established under subsection (d).

“(d) SOLVENCY STANDARDS FOR NON-LICENSED SPONSORS.—

“(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Administrator shall establish, by not later than October 1, 2003, financial solvency and capital adequacy standards that an entity that does not meet the requirements of subsection (a)(1) must meet to qualify as a PDP sponsor under this part.

“(2) COMPLIANCE WITH STANDARDS.—Each PDP sponsor that is not licensed by a State under subsection (a)(1) and for which a waiver application has been approved under subsection (c) shall meet solvency and capital adequacy standards established under paragraph (1). The Administrator shall establish certification procedures for such PDP sponsors with respect to such solvency standards in the manner described in section 1855(c)(2).

“(e) OTHER STANDARDS.—The Administrator shall establish by regulation other standards (not described in subsection (d)) for PDP sponsors and plans consistent with, and to carry out, this part. The Administrator shall publish such regulations by October 1, 2003.

“(f) RELATION TO STATE LAWS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The standards established under this part shall supersede any State law or regulation (other than State licensing laws or State laws relating to plan solvency, except as provided in subsection (d)) with respect to prescription drug plans which are offered by PDP sponsors under this part.

“(2) PROHIBITION OF STATE IMPOSITION OF PREMIUM TAXES.—No State may impose a premium tax or similar tax with respect to premiums paid to PDP sponsors for prescription drug plans under this part, or with respect to any payments made to such a sponsor by the Administrator under this part.

“SEC. 1860E. PROCESS FOR BENEFICIARIES TO SELECT QUALIFIED PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall establish a process for the selection of the prescription drug plan or Medicare+Choice plan which offer qualified prescription drug coverage through which eligible individuals elect qualified prescription drug coverage under this part.

“(b) ELEMENTS.—Such process shall include the following:

“(1) Annual, coordinated election periods, in which such individuals can change the qualifying plans through which they obtain coverage, in accordance with section 1860A(b)(2).

“(2) Active dissemination of information to promote an informed selection among qualifying plans based upon price, quality, and other features, in the manner described in (and in coordination with) section 1851(d), including the provision of annual comparative information, maintenance of a toll-free hotline, and the use of non-Federal entities.

“(B) REQUIREMENT FOR DIFFERENT PLAN SPONSORS.—The requirement in subparagraph (A) is not satisfied with respect to an area if only one PDP sponsor or Medicare+Choice organization offers all the qualifying plans in the area.

“(2) GUARANTEEING ACCESS TO COVERAGE.—In order to assure access under paragraph (1) and consistent with paragraph (3), the Administrator may provide financial incentives (including partial underwriting of risk) for a PDP sponsor to expand the service area under an existing prescription drug plan to adjoining or additional areas or to establish such a plan (including offering such a plan on a regional or nationwide basis), but only so long as (and to the extent) necessary to assure the access guaranteed under paragraph (1).

SEC. 835. RECOVERY OF OVERPAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1893 (42 U.S.C. 1395ddd) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If the repayment, within 30 days by a provider of services or supplier, of an overpayment under this title would constitute a hardship (as defined in subparagraph (B)), subject to subparagraph (C), upon request of the provider of services or supplier the Secretary shall enter into a plan with the provider of services or supplier for the repayment (through offset or otherwise) of such overpayment over a period of at least 6 months but not longer than 3 years (or not longer than 5 years in the case of extreme hardship, as determined by the Secretary). Interest shall accrue on the balance through the period of repayment. Such plan shall meet terms and conditions determined to be appropriate by the Secretary.

“(B) HARDSHIP.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the repayment of an overpayment (or overpayments) within 30 days is deemed to constitute a hardship if—

“(I) in the case of a provider of services that files cost reports, the aggregate amount of the overpayments exceeds 10 percent of the amount paid under this title to the provider of services for the cost reporting period covered by the most recently submitted cost report; or

“(II) in the case of another provider of services or supplier, the aggregate amount of the overpayments exceeds 10 percent of the amount paid under this title to the provider of services or supplier for the previous calendar year.

“(ii) RULE OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary shall establish rules for the application of this subparagraph in the case of a provider of services or supplier that was not paid under this title during the previous year or was paid under this title only during a portion of that year.

“(iii) TREATMENT OF PREVIOUS OVERPAYMENTS.—If a provider of services or supplier has entered into a repayment plan under subparagraph (A) with respect to a specific overpayment amount, such payment amount under the repayment plan shall not be taken into account under clause (i) with respect to subsequent overpayment amounts.

“(C) EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if—

“(i) the Secretary has reason to suspect that the provider of services or supplier may file for bankruptcy or otherwise cease to do business or discontinue participation in the program under this title; or

“(ii) there is an indication of fraud or abuse committed against the program.

“(D) IMMEDIATE COLLECTION IF VIOLATION OF REPAYMENT PLAN.—If a provider of services or supplier fails to make a payment in accordance with a repayment plan under this paragraph, the Secretary may immediately seek to offset or otherwise recover the total balance outstanding (including applicable interest) under the repayment plan.

“(E) RELATION TO NO FAULT PROVISION.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as affecting the application of section 1870(c) (relating to no adjustment in the cases of certain overpayments).

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a provider of services or supplier that is determined to have received an overpayment under this title and that seeks a reconsideration by a qualified independent contractor on such determination under section 1869(b)(1), the Secretary may not take any action (or authorize any other person, including any medicare contractor, as defined in subparagraph (C)) to recoup the overpayment until the date the decision on the reconsideration has been rendered. If the provisions of section 1869(b)(1) (providing for such a reconsideration by a qualified independent contractor) are not in effect, in applying the previous sentence any reference to such a reconsideration shall be treated as a reference to a redetermination by the fiscal intermediary or carrier involved.

“(B) COLLECTION WITH INTEREST.—Insofar as the determination on such appeal is against the provider of services or supplier, interest on the overpayment shall accrue on and after the date of the original notice of overpayment. Insofar as such determination against the provider of services or supplier is later reversed, the Secretary shall provide for repayment of the amount recouped plus interest at the same rate as would apply under the previous sentence for the period in which the amount was recouped.

care contractor’ has the meaning given such term in section 1889(g).

“(3) LIMITATION ON USE OF EXTRAPO- LATION.—A medicare contractor may not use extrapolation to determine overpayment amounts to be recovered by recoupment, offset, or otherwise unless—

“(A) there is a sustained or high level of payment error (as defined by the Secretary by regulation); or

“(B) documented educational intervention has failed to correct the payment error (as determined by the Secretary).

“(4) PROVISION OF SUPPORTING DOCUMENTA- TION.—In the case of a provider of services or supplier with respect to which amounts were previously overpaid, a medicare contractor may request the periodic production of records or supporting documentation for a limited sample of submitted claims to ensure that the previous practice is not continuing.

“(5) CONSENT SETTLEMENT REFORMS.—

“(B) OPPORTUNITY TO SUBMIT ADDITIONAL INFORMATION BEFORE CONSENT SETTLEMENT OFFER.—Before offering a provider of services or supplier a consent settlement, the Secretary shall—

“(i) communicate to the provider of services or supplier—

“(I) that, based on a review of the medical records requested by the Secretary, a preliminary evaluation of those records indicates that there would be an overpayment;

“(II) the nature of the problems identified in such evaluation; and

“(III) the steps that the provider of services or supplier should take to address the problems; and

“(ii) provide for a 45-day period during which the provider of services or supplier may furnish additional information concerning the medical records for the claims that had been reviewed.

“(C) CONSENT SETTLEMENT OFFER.—The Secretary shall review any additional information furnished by the provider of services or supplier under subparagraph (B)(ii). Taking into consideration such information, the Secretary shall determine if there still appears to be an overpayment. If so, the Secretary—

“(i) shall provide notice of such determination to the provider of services or supplier, including an explanation of the reason for such determination; and

“(ii) in order to resolve the overpayment, may offer the provider of services or supplier—

“(I) the opportunity for a statistically valid random sample; or

“(II) a consent settlement.

The opportunity provided under clause (ii)(I) does not waive any appeal rights with respect to the alleged overpayment involved.

“(D) CONSENT SETTLEMENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘consent settlement’ means an agreement between the Secretary and a provider of services or supplier whereby both parties agree to settle a projected overpayment based on less than a statistically valid sample of claims and the provider of services or supplier agrees not to appeal the claims involved.

“(6) NOTICE OF OVER-UTILIZATION OF CODES.—The Secretary shall establish, in consultation with organizations representing the classes of providers of services and suppliers, a process under which the Secretary provides for notice to classes of providers of services and suppliers served by the contractor in cases in which the contractor has identified that particular billing codes may be overutilized by that class of providers of services or suppliers under the programs under this title (or provisions of title XI insofar as they relate to such programs).

“(7) PAYMENT AUDITS.—

“(A) WRITTEN NOTICE FOR POST-PAYMENT AUDITS.—Subject to subparagraph (C), if a medicare contractor decides to conduct a post-payment audit of a provider of services or supplier under this title, the contractor shall provide the provider of services or supplier with written notice (which may be in electronic form) of the intent to conduct such an audit.

“(B) EXPLANATION OF FINDINGS FOR ALL AUDITS.—Subject to subparagraph (C), if a medicare contractor audits a provider of services or supplier under this title, the contractor shall—

“(i) give the provider of services or supplier a full review and explanation of the findings of the audit in a manner that is understandable to the provider of services or supplier and permits the development of an appropriate corrective action plan;

“(ii) inform the provider of services or supplier of the appeal rights under this title as well as consent settlement options (which are at the discretion of the Secretary);

“(iii) give the provider of services or supplier an opportunity to provide additional information to the contractor; and

“(iv) take into account information provided, on a timely basis, by the provider of services or supplier under clause (iii).

“(C) EXCEPTION.—Subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall not apply if the provision of notice or findings would compromise pending law enforcement activities, whether civil or criminal, or reveal findings of law enforcement-related audits.

“(8) STANDARD METHODOLOGY FOR PROBE SAMPLING.—The Secretary shall establish a standard methodology for medicare contractors to use in selecting a sample of claims for review in the case of an abnormal billing pattern.”

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The DSH allotment for any State—

“(i) for fiscal year 2003 is equal to the DSH allotment for the State for fiscal year 2001 under the table in paragraph (2), without regard to paragraph (4), increased, subject to subparagraph (B) and paragraph (5), by the percentage change in the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average), for fiscal year 2001; and

“(ii) for each succeeding fiscal year is equal to the DSH allotment for the State for the previous fiscal year under this subparagraph increased, subject to subparagraph (B) and paragraph (5), by 1.7 percent or, in the case of fiscal years beginning with the fiscal year specified in subparagraph (C) for that State, the percentage change in the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average), for the previous fiscal year.”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(C) FISCAL YEAR SPECIFIED.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the fiscal year specified in this subparagraph for a State is the first fiscal year for which the Secretary estimates that the DSH allotment for that State will equal (or no longer exceed) the DSH allotment for that State under the law as in effect before the date of the enactment of this subparagraph.”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) each will control 30 minutes of debate on the bill.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON).

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4954 because it provides prescription drugs to all seniors as an entitlement under Medicare.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to bring this bill to the floor of this great House. Everywhere I go, seniors look at me with worry in their eyes, concern that they will not be able to buy the prescription drugs needed to get well, worry that they will not be able to afford the many prescriptions needed to enable them to enjoy their lives and keep on with their daily activities.

Mr. Speaker, nothing is more important than assuring that our seniors have access to prescription drugs as part of Medicare, within Medicare as part of that entitlement to health services, because indeed, Medicare without prescription drugs is a mere shadow of the promise of health care security that Medicare has always represented to the seniors of our great country.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud that this bill provides the deepest discounts on drug prices that any bill has ever brought to this floor. It is a 30 percent discount, compared to every other plan that provides a 10 percent discount.

On top of that 30 percent discount are powerful subsidies, 80 percent subsidies, up to $1,000 in drug costs, and 50% after that. This is powerful help. For those living under 150 percent of poverty income, it will provide 100 percent of their drug cost needs up to $2,000. For over that, States will have freed-up resources to help those that cannot afford their prescriptions.

This is a powerful benefit for our seniors right up through catastrophic coverage, which provides the peace of mind that they so deserve in their senior years.

But that is not all this bill does. It goes on to provide better preventive care for our seniors and to provide those plans that are able to provide disease management, which is the only way that seniors with chronic illness are going to enjoy health in their elder years. Also, it reduces the cost of medication errors, provides safety for our seniors, compensates our providers more realistically, and in general, would strengthen our Medicare program.

I am going to go into the details of the bill later, Mr. Speaker. I will reserve my time for a discussion of this powerful new expansion of Medicare to improve the lives of the seniors of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I would explain, when one sells out to the insurance industry, we get the Republican bill. They free up any resources that go to the Hartford Insurance Companies.

The truth is that the average senior in this country spends $3,059 on drugs. Under the Republican plan, they will have to spend $1,959 out of pocket to get that $3,000 worth of drugs. Under the bill that we would suggest, they would spend only $691.80.

So Members can see that the Democratic plan, had we been allowed to offer it, is better. It does something for the seniors that the Republican bill does not do: it gives them the wherewithal to afford drugs. It gives them an entitlement that they are entitled to.

The Republican bill is an entitlement for the pharmaceutical industry and the insurance industry. They are the only ones who get any money under the Republican bill. Under our alternative, the seniors are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and an expert on health policy and prescription drugs.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, at some point, somebody needs to talk about reality. What we have heard from the other side of the aisle is that they want to operate under democracy, that democracy does not operate here.

There is a difference between democracy and chaos. Democracy means majority rules, but it also means rights of the minority. What are some of those rights? The rights are the minority gets to participate if they play by the rules. What are the rules? That under the budget, and they want democracy, under the budget they have the right to offer a plan which costs no more than the amount the budget provides: $350 billion. What they presented was a plan that costs $974 billion.

Guess what? They do not play by the rules; they do not get to offer their substitute. What they want to do is do whatever they want to do without following the rules. That is not democracy.

Secondly, what I heard from the gentleman from Florida while we were arguing the rules was, our bill does not do a pay-back to the providers. What does that mean? They are going to spend $1 trillion, and they do not take any of it to address the fact that our physicians serving seniors have a payment system that is broken. Why is it broken? Because it is not automatic. If it were automatic, it would adjust to the market. Instead, it is an arbitrary, fixed price. But they do not even want to fix that in their bill.

Now, we have also heard several times, the latest argument was that we are in the pocket of somebody; that Republicans can only write a bill if they are in the pocket of somebody. Oftentimes we have heard that we are in the pocket of the pharmaceutical manufacturers.

Mr. Speaker, let me explain what is in this bill. The Democrats put into effect a payment called “best price.” Whenever someone says, we are going to give you the best price, you had better beware. What is “best price”? It is an arbitrary, bureaucratic, green eye shade determination of a floor of what we are going to pay.

When the Democrats ran this place and when the Democrats wrote legislation, they put in best price. Do Members know what we suggest? In this bill, we get rid of best price. What in the world would we pay if we got rid of best price? Guess what.

Do Members know that in that pocket of the pharmaceutical manufacturers that we are in there is going to be a whole lot more room for us, because the pharmaceutical manufacturers get taken out of their bottom line $18 billion in this bill. They are denied $18 billion by going from best price.

They have to help us solve this problem by the tune of $18 billion, because instead of best price, guess what we ask them to do? We ask them to compete. We have all kinds of laws to produce pure drugs. Who will give it to us at the cheapest price? A modest competition produces a savings of $18 billion applied to the benefits to seniors paid for by pharmaceutical manufacturers.

They have nothing in their bill. They have rhetoric. They have hot air. We have $18 billion paid out of the pockets of the pharmaceutical manufacturers to help seniors.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the distinguished chair of the Committee on Ways and Means that I suggested that the Republicans were in the pocket of the insurance companies, and I was about to say that when they go to bed with the pharmaceutical industry, they get a bill like this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), democracy means give the minority a substitute bill, period. That is what it means. Under the rules? Look, we go by the American rules, not the rules of the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

It is a disgrace that they do not give us the chance for a substitute. They did it on the trade bill, a motion to recommit. Now they are doing it on this.

Mr. Speaker, we will never yield to the gentleman's demeaning democracy. The gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) talks about "this great House." I want to talk substance, that she is demeaning this great House. She is changing this from the people's House to something else.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a shell. It is worse than empty in the sense that it is filled with deceptions. Ten words: no set premiums, no assured benefits, and use private insurance.

The gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) said, let us not get into the details. I can understand why. She likes to say that 44 percent of women will be covered without cost. What she does not say is that those women are especially vulnerable to paying more than $2,000 bucks; and after that, they fall into a deep hole of noncoverage.

This bill is not part of Medicare like hospital and physician bills, and we say, why not? They just do not like Medicare.

Now, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) does not like us to talk about Medicare+Choice. I can understand. That has not worked. Under Medicare+Choice if there is not enough money then you have to come to Congress. Under your bill if there is not enough money, I would call this no prescription choice, except you can run to the Secretary to get some more money.

This bill, as I said, is worse than an empty shell; and what makes it worse is you are playing the shell game with democracy.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes and 15 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act.

When it comes to Medicare, Congress must consistently balance accessibility of services from qualified providers, cost and financial stability of the Medicare program. This legislation does just that.

H.R. 4954 provides a long-overdue prescription drug benefit that is voluntary and available to all Medicare beneficiaries in a fiscally responsible way. Our House-passed budget provides for $350 billion for a Medicare prescription drug benefit and modernizations to the program.

According to CBO estimates our proposed drug benefit is estimated to cost $310 billion over 10 years and also achieves a 30 percent savings on drug costs. It is projected that in 2004 the median out-of-pocket drug costs for Medicare beneficiaries will be $1,453. Under our proposal, $827 of that, more than 50 percent, of the beneficiary's drug expenditures will be covered.

The Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act also provides a number of reasonable and necessary adjustments to provider payments. Most importantly, this legislation includes $21.3 billion for physicians to reverse the negative and irrational payment updates they received this year and are expected to receive next year.

The physician payment provision helps us to ensure that physicians will continue to participate in the Medicare program and provide quality health service to beneficiaries. If we do not ensure that providers are adequately reimbursed, all the new benefits that we have passed and will pass for Medicare beneficiaries will be for naught because providers will close their doors to beneficiaries.

My colleagues on the other side of the aisle argue that this legislation is an empty promise to seniors. I cannot disagree more. This package provides a prescription drug benefit that covers more than 95 percent of Medicare beneficiaries and helps to improve access to quality health care services.

Let us give our seniors access to quality health services that they deserve. Let us pass a meaningful prescription drug benefit that is voluntary and available to all Medicare beneficiaries. Let us make sure that our seniors have a choice in Medicare. Let us not play politics with America's seniors.

I urge my colleagues to support the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN).

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is fundamentally flawed. It does not use the Medicare model for providing benefits; and with Medicare, when we provide benefits for physicians or hospitals, our seniors are guaranteed those benefits. In this bill for prescription drugs, they are guaranteed nothing.

It reminds me of what we told our seniors with HMOs. Join HMOs and you will get prescription drug coverage. What happened as soon as they joined? The deductible, the co-pays went up, and the amount of coverage went down.

There is no protection in this bill on premiums like under Medicare. In Medicare, our seniors know that their Part B premium is tied to 25 percent of the cost. They know how much it will be. There is no protection in this bill as to what the premium will be set at or how much it will increase. No protections to our seniors.

In Medicare, we know that there will be a reimbursement system in our communities. You can always rely on Medicare. The underlying bill relies on private insurance. Mr. Speaker, there is no protection in this bill for those private insurance companies leaving our community.

Look what happened with the HMOs. They enrolled seniors. They brought them in, and then they left town.

Ask the people in Maryland. In 1996, we had eight HMOs writing seniors business, private insurance. Today, we have one with a capped enrollment. The private insurance companies will be there as long as they can make money; and as soon as they cannot make money, they will be gone.

There is no protection in this bill to provide prescription drugs to our seniors. It is fundamentally flawed, and we should correct it. We will have an opportunity to do it with the motion to recommit.

I urge my colleagues, if we are serious about providing prescription drug coverage for seniors, let us use the model that has worked. Let us use the Medicare model. Let us not use private insurance, solely private insurance. It has not worked in the past, and it will not work under this bill.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MCCRERY), an esteemed member of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MCCRERY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, to those who say the benefit in this bill is not rich enough, Mr. Speaker, I would ask them to remember that Medicare spending, despite the bipartisan Balanced Budget Act of 1997, is still growing at an unsustainable rate. As a share of our gross domestic product, Medicare has grown from 1.3 percent in 1980 to more than 2.2 percent today and will hit 5 percent by the year 2030. By 2075, Medicare will be just under 10 percent of our gross domestic product.

10 percent of GDP may not seem like much until you consider that over the last four decades Federal tax revenues have averaged between 18 and 19 percent of GDP. In other words, Mr. Speaker, under current projections, unless the Federal tax burden is raised to new and potentially economically destructive levels, Medicare, together with Social Security and Medicaid, will quickly crowd out spending on other important initiatives, including defense, homeland security, education, transportation and others.

These long-term trends will only be exacerbated by the addition of a prescription drug benefit which is not coupled with meaningful structural reform of the Medicare program.

I am pleased, therefore, that the legislation before us this evening includes the first steps towards the long-term structural reforms needed to bend the growth curve. Just as it would be irresponsible for the Congress, Mr. Speaker, not to try to help seniors with the cost of prescription drugs, it would be irresponsible to add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare without tackling these long-term trends in the growth of Medicare spending.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that next year we will come back here on this floor and continue the kind of reforms that we started in this bill tonight so that those who are under 65 in our society will not be burdened with a tax that just cannot be sustained and continue the kind of society, the kind of economy that we enjoy in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt this bill along with the minor reforms that we have this evening.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, pending recognizing the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) for 2 minutes, I would just like to remind the Members that the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. McCREERY) recalls that it was the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) who voted in committee not to increase money for nursing homes. She voted against eliminating co-pays for home health care. She voted against limiting the premiums to seniors, and she voted against giving seniors a choice of going to any pharmacy. So much for her concern for the seniors.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I assume my colleague was speaking on his own time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The gentlewoman is correct. The gentleman was speaking on his time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT).

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bad bill because there is no assured benefits and there is no set premiums because the Republicans are privatizing Medicare. They are giving this whole benefit to the private insurance companies.

Now you have to remember that the chairman of the committee chaired the Medicare Commission and spent an entire year trying to get a voucher system for senior citizens in Medicare. This is his second try. Buried in this bill is the creation of a new private benefit management company or management authority that will handle the HMOs and will handle the private drug plans.

Now you think I am making this up, but if you take the bill, and I will bet you there is not a person on this floor that has read page 157, line 16, which prevents the Secretary of HHS from "interfering in any way with the negotiations between the private drug plans and the Medicare+Choice organizations and drug manufacturers."

Now what this is saying is that the Secretary of Health and Human Services, whoever that may be, has no ability to stand up for the people of this country, the senior citizens, the 40 million people that count on this program, and negotiate for them. She has to stand back and let the private drug programs and the pharmaceutical companies negotiate.

Now, we all saw what happened with Medicare+Choice. Hundreds of thousands of people were lured into HMOs and then were dumped out in the street; 500,000 in my State; and I do not know how many across this country. And you say, well, we did not learn anything from that. We know the private industry will take care of them. So let us give them the drug benefit. You are going to get the same thing, and it is rotten.

Everyone should vote "no" and vote "yes" on the Democratic alternative.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds to remind the Members that both the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) voted against increasing payments to hospitals, voting against filling the Republican gap in the drug coverage, and voted against requiring drug companies to offer real discounts. So much that they care for the senior citizens of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA).

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, we are told by my Republican colleagues that this is a powerful benefit, that this is an historic opportunity. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. For you see, Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago to the day an identical bill passed this House of Representatives. And why did it pass 2 years ago at this time and why is this bill on the floor here today? Because 4 months from now we will have the November congressional elections.

And you see, the American public wants a drug benefit. And they do not want to give one, but they keep bringing up this fig leaf 4 months, every 2 years before the Congressional elections.

But what is their bill all about? This is not a Medicare benefit like hospitals and physicians. This is a subsidy to insurance companies. We were told 2 years ago when this same bill was up that no insurance companies are going to sell these policies. For everyone who buys a policy will have a claim against the policy, and it is going to be identical to the failed experiment that the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) called Medicare Choice.

Two million people have been canceled by insurance companies from that plan, and the same is going to happen here. But for a senior with drug costs of $3,800 a year, the Republican plan will give them almost nothing. After they are charged a premium, a deductible, they pay $150 for the first $1,000 of costs. They pay one-half or $500 for the next thousand. Then they have no coverage at all for any and all drug costs from $2,000 to $3,800. So for $3,800 in drug costs per year the senior gets $3,100 of extra payments out of the pocket. The benefit is $655.

Is that what they want to give their mothers and their aging fathers? They should be ashamed of themselves.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE).

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization Prescription Drug Act. It is a good bill. It fits within a budget. It fits within a budget plan. We have got a budget. We have got a plan. It meets the needs of seniors. It meets the needs of health care providers. It meets the needs for the future.

In 1965, Medicare should have included a prescription drug benefit.

For many years after 1965, Democrats had the opportunity to propose legislation for a prescription drug benefit. In fact as early as 1993, they controlled the House, the other body and the House down the road here, and did not do a thing for seniors on prescription drugs; and now tonight they rush in, claim that we will not let them have the substitute when in fact their substitute costs almost a trillion dollars; and that is the reason they cannot have it, because it does not fit within a budget, and it does not fit within a plan.

Mr. Speaker, just 3 hours ago they were screaming that we had to raise the debt ceiling because we were spending too much. Tonight they are claiming we are not spending enough. Vote for this bill.

I rise in support of H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug act of 2002. I'd like to congratulate the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce for producing a bill that provides a much-needed Medicare prescription drug benefit within a fiscally responsible framework.

No senior should be forced to choose between the basic necessities of life and purchasing prescription drugs. This bill provides prescription drug coverage that is affordable, accessible, and completely voluntary.

Because the Medicare program has not been significantly modernized since its inception in 1965 to include a prescription drug benefit, it is not meeting the needs of Iowa seniors.

While the drug benefit is indeed important, Iowans recognize that the critical inequities in today's current Medicare program must also be addressed. While Iowa boasts the 8th highest quality of healthcare in the Nation, it is 50th in Medicare reimbursement.

Actions that affect Medicare affect Iowa's entire health care system. If health care providers leave rural areas, who will write prescriptions under the new drug benefit? Who will provide the care that cannot be provided by drugs alone? If local hospitals close, where will we take our children for emergency care?

Many of these problems have compounded since 1965, but rural health care, particularly in Iowa, is on the verge of a crisis. This bill offers significant progress toward bridging the gap between urban providers and those in rural States such as Iowa.

As a member of the House Committee on Ways and Means, I successfully amended this important legislation with Medicare's antiquated reimbursement policies in the current system in mind. My amendment is directed at the hospitals that need help the most, especially those in Iowa. It has been estimated that my amendment will provide $123 million over the years in much-needed relief for Iowa hospitals such as Covenant in Waterloo, Mercy in Dubuque, and Regional Medical Center in my hometown of Manchester.

I am also pleased that this legislation includes an important provision recognizing the unique cost of physician work in rural areas. This provision would give the Secretary of Health and Human Services discretion to raise the minimum level of physician wages providing an increase of roughly $7 million to physicians in Iowa.

After years of working to correct these inequities, I'm glad to see that the House of Representatives is following my lead in addressing these disparities in the current system. While this legislation is an important step forward, I will not stop working on this important issue.

Today we are adding an unquestionably important prescription drug benefit to Medicare as well as beginning to reverse the years of unjust reimbursement formulas that have burdened Iowa's hospitals and physicians. We have listened to both seniors and health care professionals.

The budgetary parameters for this bill were established in the Concurrent Resolution on the budget for Fiscal Year 2003 (H. Con. Res 353), the budget resolution that the House passed in March and then deemed enforceable in the House last month.

That budget made modernizing Medicare with, among other things, a prescription drug benefit and reforming Medicare among the highest priorities for the Congress—along with fighting the war on terrorism and encouraging economic recovery.

The budget provides $5 billion in fiscal year 2003 and $350 billion over 10 years to strengthen Medicare and include a prescription drug benefit. That money was specifically fenced off from the rest of a budget in a reserve fund.

This bill meets the requirements in the budget resolution and therefore I am releasing amounts in the reserve fund provided in the budget resolution to enable the House to consider the bill.

Some have said that $350 billion is inadequate. The bottom line is that we made the maximum amount available for Medicare, given the state of the economy and the costs we face in the war against terrorism.

Indeed, the bill provides almost twice the resources for Medicare reform as the President proposed in his budget for fiscal year 2003. Unfortunately, critics of the bill failed to offer an alternative when the budget resolution was considered on the floor. And the other body has yet to even consider a budget resolution, despite the fact that they are required by law to do so by April 15.

As modified by the rule, this bill is "on budget" and within the reserve fund level of $350 billion over 10 years. About $310 billion of the total is for the drug benefit, around $40 billion of additional assistance is provided to struggling Medicare providers, and the rest is for various miscellaneous but important provisions such as regulatory reform.

The modernization provisions in the bill include a Medicare+Choice competition program, regulatory reform, and the President's prescription drug discount card.

I believe that modernization efforts like the Medicare Plus Choice competition program are necessary to help address Medicare's long-term financial liabilities. I would encourage future conferees on this bill to make further reforms to address Medicare's financial liabilities, should the other body act on this legislation and allow us to have a conference.

In conclusion, this bill fulfills our commitment to enact a prescription drug benefit within Medicare that is affordable, and that is part of the overall effort to reform Medicare to make the program sustainable over the long term.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), who realizes that the National Community Pharmacists Association states that the Republican bill penalizes beneficiaries desiring to continue their trusted relationship with their pharmacists and access to valuable pharmacist services.

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, my problem with the bill that is under consideration tonight is in the theory behind it. My family has been in the insurance business in Tennessee for over a hundred years, and the reason we have Medicare in this country is because in the private world of insurance, there is no way that a senior citizen 80 years old with heart trouble and diabetes can buy health insurance. That is why Medicare came into being. They still could not buy it if we did not have Medicare. So what we are trying to do here is put a square peg in a round hole in that this bill tries to make an insurable product out of a benefit for which there is no risk pool for the concept, the theory of insurance to work.

Insurance does not work when every policyholder is also making a claim against their policy. By the very inception of this kind of protocol, every policyholder will be making a claim. It is simply not an insurable product. What we are going to wind up with, I am afraid, and we will be back here in a year if this passes and passes the Senate, is we are going to have a patchwork across the country of differing coverages, differing plans, differing copays, differing premiums, differing in every respect. Nobody will know for sure what they have got.

What is one to do? One will figure what one's drug payment is a year; and if it is less than what they would get if there is a plan offered and knowing they cannot go to their neighborhood pharmacy even if the pharmacy is willing to abide by the plan, if their drug benefit is more than what they are spending, they will take it. If it is less than that, they will not. So everybody that the insurance company signed up will be making a claim and will be getting more than their premium copayments. The whole structure of this thing is flawed, and that is why I cannot support it.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Washington (Ms. DUNN), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important values to all seniors is that they be financially independent in their retirement, and that means they do not want to be a burden on their children and that means access to affordable health care. The high cost of prescription drugs and the lack of prescription drug coverage has caused many seniors, and especially senior women, to be very worried about their independence.

I was sorry to have witnessed early this evening my women colleagues in the opposition claiming that older women will not be helped by this bill because I have seen how older women are being forced to make tough decisions about whether to spend their limited dollars on necessary prescription drugs or other of life's necessities. Our mothers and grandmothers are outliving our fathers and our grandfathers. They are living on fewer dollars for more years, and they are far more likely to develop chronic medical conditions.

This bill does benefit women. This bill helps seniors on fixed incomes and those with high drug costs. A woman living on an income of less than $15,000 a year will receive total assistance from this Federal Government Medicare program for prescription drugs. While all seniors will benefit because any senior can opt to buy this coverage, nearly 17 million or 44 percent of Medicare beneficiaries will qualify for additional assistance when this bill is fully implemented.

Perhaps the most important part of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that no senior under this coverage will ever have to pay more than $3,700 a year for their total of drugs. Improving Medicare, though, is not only about providing drug benefits. It is about giving seniors access to doctors and hospitals and Medicare HMOs and other services they need. So we put some additional benefits in this bill to ensure that doctors will continue to serve seniors. We increase the reimbursements those doctors receive. We also help rural, urban, and teaching hospitals care for seniors and low-income individuals.

For Medicare HMOs this bill requires Medicare to account for military retirees in the future, which means higher Medicare+Choice reimbursements in every county in this country with military facilities.

I urge my colleagues to support this fine bill.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 seconds to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. THURMAN).

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) for yielding me this time.

I want to point out something here that continues to be talked about in the low-income seniors being given total prescription drugs. The problem is in the bill that we are talking about, it does not waive the asset test that beneficiaries would have to meet in order to get their benefits. So in fact the number of people who would qualify for the low-income benefit would actually be much less.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOLDEN).

Mr. HOLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the bill. Those of us from rural districts and those of us from central and northeastern Pennsylvania know that the idea that we are going to turn over the administration of a prescription drug program for our senior citizens to the insurance industry, to the HMOs, and have it be fair and universal is ridiculous. In fact it is a joke.

Number one, the insurance industry wants no part of it. As the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER) mentioned before, why would they when every policyholder is also going to file a claim? They are going to lose their shirt in this proposal. Medicare+Choice has failed across the country, but it has failed miserably in rural America. My constituents had to look at commercials coming out of the Philadelphia media market, Cadillac plan for prescription drug coverage and low premiums, and they were not able to participate. The reason they were not able to participate is because they had lower participation and lower reimbursement from Medicare.

As a result of it, we did not have universal coverage as Medicare+Choice.

We cannot make the same mistake. We need to have a divine benefit. We need to have a divine premium, and we need to have universal coverage for all our senior citizens.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 20 seconds. I want to make a correction of the record.

Over and over again my colleagues say we do not have a defined benefit. We have a very clearly defined benefit. Do we have a defined premium? Of course not. The part B premium is not defined. That is a percentage of costs and it varies every year. Federal health employee benefit plans do not define the premium in law. It varies every year.

In our plan we do not want to set the premium in law because if we can provide a more efficient plan, we want to be able to pass on that savings through a lower premium to seniors. We are proud of our core benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN).

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairwoman for yielding me the time. I am glad that she was able to correct the record on a few misstatements that have been made this evening.

I would like to correct the record again. My friend from Pennsylvania just stood up and talked about Medicare+Choice and how this is the same. It is not. In fact, in this bill, we are helping to make Medicare+Choice work. Just because we have choked off the funding to Medicare+Choice so it does not work for our seniors, including a bunch of mine, who were not getting the right reimbursement has nothing to do with this plan. This is an entirely different plan, but it does help on Medicare+Choice, and I hope people are happy to hear that who are so concerned about it.

This is a great plan. This is exactly what our seniors need. One would never design the Medicare program today without adding prescription drugs. The other side wants to add $1 trillion of prescription drugs. After just voting not to raise the debt limit they want to add another $1 trillion.

We are doing this within $350 billion, which is responsible, which is, unlike what my friend from Wisconsin said earlier, a lot different than the bill 2 years ago. It is more money, yes, because we believe it is necessary to be able to provide seniors with the coverage they need.

CBO has scored this. CBO has said that this will lower prescription drug prices more than any other bill that has been introduced in this House that has been scored by CBO. Our bill lowers drug prices more. There is a discount for all seniors. In fact, for the average senior there will be a 44 percent reduction in the drug costs. Average drug costs $2,150, they only pay $1,200 out of pocket. That is a savings of 44 percent.

There is another 44 percent number we ought to hear about tonight and that is for low-income seniors, which is 44 percent of seniors. They will pay no deductible. They will pay no percentage, 20 percent or 50 percent. They only have a nominal copay. They get this for free. That is 44 percent of the seniors. The very people the other side has said tonight repeatedly they are worried about, that they are not going to get a benefit, they get a total benefit.

This is precisely the kind of plan that the Republican Party has been talking about for the last couple of years, but it is even better than the one from 2 years ago. It meets the principles. It lowers the cost of prescription drugs and does that now. It guarantees all seniors drug coverage. It gives seniors more choices including Medicare+Choice.

It is a good plan. It is affordable. It is voluntary. It preserves the right to choose. I strongly urge its adoption.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY), pending which I would point out to my distinguished colleagues that the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) both voted against protecting low-income seniors from higher copayments and the gaping gap in the Republican plan. So much they care for the senior citizens.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

At the heart of what this debate is all about is a clear choice, whether we should provide a prescription drug benefit for seniors through the Medicare program or whether we should send money to insurance companies to induce them to provide a coverage that at the present time they have said they do not want to write, prescription drug coverage for seniors.

I used to be an insurance commissioner. For 8 years it was my responsibility to protect the seniors from insurance companies in the State of North Dakota. There has not been a Member of this body that spent more time talking to seniors about insurance than me, and directions that I have received from seniors on this issue are absolutely consistent and absolutely clear. They want Medicare coverage for prescription drugs.

Not a single senior has said to me, please, I want to go buy another insurance policy; please send me more agents, I want to hear what they have to say; please give me that fine print, it is fascinating and I want to read some more of it; and by the way, I want to deal with insurance companies because I so enjoy wondering whether they are going to pay that claim or whether they will not; I so enjoy wondering whether they are going to be there when I need them or whether they will be gone and out of business.

No senior has said that. It is ludicrous on its face. They know Medicare. Medicare covers their hospital bills. Medicare covers their doctor bills. Medicare has been the program that has been so vital to preserving and promoting the health of seniors in this country for the last nearly 4 decades. We do not have to invent some new hocus pocus private sector, gosh-I-hope-it-works kind of deal. We have got Medicare and the seniors know it and they like it; and they would have preferred that plan tonight, which is why we were not allowed our substitute to have a Medicare delivery of a prescription drug benefit as opposed to the alternative the majority has advanced.

Nobody wants prescription drug coverage for seniors more than the minority in this body, and they will be opposing this version because it simply will not work. It does not get the job done. Vote it "no."

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 seconds.

Under Medicare we have part A. We have part B. We have part C, and this will be part D under Medicare, providing prescription drugs to seniors to any plan sponsor, and plan sponsors may be a group of any sort, preferably companies skilled and experienced in managing drug benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP).

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to help seniors improve their quality of life by providing a prescription drug benefit in Medicare. On a daily basis it is reported that the cost of cutting-edge, life-saving medicines have skyrocketed, forcing those on fixed incomes to make difficult choices.

One constituent in my district had drug costs of over $15,000 a year for him and his wife, and their Social Security check was $21,000 a year, and there are countless other heartbreaking stories just like that one.

These seniors have worked hard all their lives to provide for their families, but now they can barely make ends meet.

We can all agree if Medicare were created today it would contain a prescription drug component. In Michigan alone, this bill would benefit over 1.2 million seniors. This proposal provides affordable coverage for every senior without gimmicks, without sunsets, without pie-in-the-sky proposals that cost over $1 trillion.

Regrettably, some have sought to politicize this issue and hold other seniors and the disabled hostage to a cruel game of brinksmanship. We must strengthen and modernize Medicare. Vote for this bill.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds to point out that every Republican, including the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), voted against assuring seniors that they could get the drugs that their doctor prescribes, because there is nothing in the Republican bill that guarantees the drugs that a doctor might prescribe.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues on the Republican side have never truly embraced Medicare. They opposed it in 1965, they have talked about letting it die on the vine, and they have described it as a Soviet-style program. In fact, what we have in this bill from my Republican colleagues and friends is a bill that moves us much closer to privatizing Medicare all together.

To privatize Medicare is to ignore the lessons of the Enron scandal and the pension abuse that occurred as a result. To privatize Medicare is to turn back the clock to those bad old days before 1965 when the health care for our seniors was not guaranteed and left to the private sector.

Under this Republican plan, a senior who is paying $250 a month in prescription drugs, and that is a lot of our seniors, would lose coverage, total coverage under this plan after August. So that, come September, come October, come November, come December, that senior would have to, out of his or her own pocket, pay for the remaining cost of all those drugs.

Under this plan, a senior who has $5,000 in annual prescription drug costs, and there are a lot of them who do, would have to pay $4,200 out-of-pocket out of that $5,000 cost. Compare that to the Democratic plan, where the total cost to that senior for the $5,000 would be $1,380, a savings of $2,800 between the Republican plan and the Democratic plan.

Those are the facts, and that is the difference. But we do not have a chance to put our Democratic plan for a vote here. Mr. Speaker, today, today as we speak, seniors are having to make a choice, do I buy my groceries, or do I buy my prescription drugs? Do I pay my rent, or do I buy the medication I need? We should not have them make that choice.

Give seniors what they want. They want an affordable and guaranteed benefit. The Democratic plan does that; the Republican plan does not. Let us defeat this plan.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to note that it is curious the gentleman from California keeps citing the votes that we cast against his unfunded amendments, the unfunded amendments from the other side, when he is about to cast a vote against funding 43 percent of the seniors in California with everything, drug costs, copayments, deductibles, premiums, the whole business, 43 percent, and saving California $5 billion under Medicaid with which they can then expand drug benefits for many other folks in their State. Too bad.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. ENGLISH).

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Ways and Means, I particularly want to pay tribute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), who has been on the receiving end of many barbs tonight. The fact is that no one has fought harder to bring a prescription drug benefit to the Medicare program; and if we are successful in that, she, perhaps more than any other Member of this body, will deserve substantial credit.

I am here tonight because I represent a district which consists of working families for whom the abstractions of this debate do not mean much but who desperately need help on their prescriptions. This program that is being proposed in this landmark legislation would give them a flexible and affordable benefit, one that would be voluntary, a program that would give them real choices, allowing them to customize their benefits. It would provide a benefit that would be very substantial, more generous in fact than the one that had been previously proposed by the Clinton administration that folks on the other side of the aisle once embraced.

This is a program that represents a $350 billion investment in the Medicare program and one that would provide substantial benefits to seniors that would be available for a premium of about $1 a day. At the same time, for those seniors, including many in my district who cannot afford that premium, this program would provide full coverage for low-income seniors.

What is particularly striking about this legislation is that it establishes a firm ceiling, a limit, catastrophic coverage for people who participate in this program, an ultimate limit on the amount of prescription drugs they would be liable for in a given year, a limit of $3,700. That is extraordinarily generous, and it positions people who participate in this program to be able to have affordable drugs when they need it.

The 30 percent discount that is built into this program has been much mentioned. Let me say it also allows CMS to negotiate with the drug companies to get the best possible discount and to sharpen their pencils.

This is a great program, and I hope the House will pass it tonight.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. THURMAN) for 15 seconds.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, we keep hearing this 30 percent. Actually, there has been a letter dated by the CBO on July 26 that says that they are confused, that there has been some confusion about the meaning of the 30 percent cost management factor that CBO applied in analyzing H.R. 4954. It goes on to say, the savings are stated as a proportion of total spending and do not represent a per-prescription discount.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ROSS), who understands why the National Association of Chain Drug Stores and the National Retail Federation and other pharmacy groups have said they consider a vote for the Republican bill to be a vote against the professional pharmacy and pharmacists.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I do rise in opposition, strong opposition, to this bill.

Just a few months ago, I was in Glenwood, Arkansas, a small town in my district, and ran into an elderly woman who is a retired pharmacist and who just happened to be a relief pharmacist in my hometown when I was a small child growing up.

She related the story to me about how when I was a child and she was a pharmacist, if she had a prescription that cost over $5, she would go on and fill the next one while she built up enough confidence to let the patient know it was going to cost $5. I think that really demonstrates, more than life itself, that today's Medicare, if we think about it, was really designed for yesterday's medical care.

Health insurance companies, which are very greedy, in my opinion, make huge profits and even they cover the cost of medicine. Why? Because they know it helps patients to get well and live healthier lifestyles.

As a small town family pharmacy owner, I am sick and tired of seeing seniors leave the doors of our pharmacy without their medicine. And living in a small town, I learn a week or 10 days later where they are in the hospital running up a $10,000 or $20,000 Medicare bill simply because they could not afford their medicine or could not afford to take it properly. So I came to Congress to try to do something about it.

This should not be a partisan issue. I wrote a bipartisan bill alongside the gentleman from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON), a Republican; and the Republican national leadership would not give us a hearing on our bill. They would not give us a vote on our bill.

Now, less than 5 months before, yes, another election, they are coming to us with this plan, this so-called Medicare plan, which has nothing to do with Medicare other than attempting to privatize it, written by the drug manufacturers for the drug manufacturers.

I know my colleagues have heard a lot from both sides tonight and that very few seniors are still awake listening because it is midnight, and that is the reason they are bringing it up now, but let me say this: Do not listen to them and do not listen to us. Go to the family pharmacist and ask them which plan is right for America.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me; and I want to commend the chairman, because I know he has worked hard, along with the gentlewoman from Connecticut, to fashion a bill that addresses these concerns.

Mr. Speaker, we have seniors in South Dakota who need prescription drug relief. We have rural providers who need relief. I also share some of the concerns the gentleman just voiced about the pharmacist, and I would inquire of the chairman whether, as this process moves forward, he would be willing to work with me to provide assurances to pharmacists, particularly those in rural areas, that their concerns will be addressed?

Mr. THOMAS. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's concerns. We have moved in the direction. There are still some concerns, and I assure him that, as we move forward in Congress, we will address the concerns of pharmacists.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

I would like to point out to the gentleman from South Dakota that, while on page 18 of the other party's bill they say they require any willing provider, on page 8 of the other party's bill they say that there has to be pharmacy networks and the networks can determine cost sharing for beneficiaries outside the network.

So their bill does not provide any willing providers; and ours, at a later time, provides a lot of recognition to pharmacists.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH).

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Connecticut for yielding me this time and who has worked so hard on this legislation.

It is important for citizens of my home State, Arizona, the seniors there who are still awake at what is 20 until 9, prime time in the State of Arizona, to understand exactly what we are doing in this legislation.

Despite the wailing and gnashing of teeth about process, we ought to focus on results. Here are the simple facts, Mr. Speaker: Under our plan, prescription drug coverage under Medicare is available to every senior who wants it. Every senior who wants this plan will be eligible for coverage. We will leave no senior behind.

That is especially important when we look at the people who need the most help. The 44 percent of seniors nationwide below 175 percent of poverty, their benefit is paid for. Over $40 billion in savings to Medicaid. Real money for real people with a real prescription drug benefit.

And this is the most compelling argument, Mr. Speaker. When we cut through all the smoke and mirrors and all the rhetoric, what seniors want, what I heard at the Mesa Senior Center a couple of weeks ago, was that seniors want prescription drug savings now. When we pass this, when the other body takes its action, our plan begins covering seniors and lowering costs as soon as 50 days after the President signs the bill into law.

Mr. Speaker, the time is now to act. If this can be moved, if this bill can become law, seniors can start realizing savings before Christmas. The perfect present to give our mothers and fathers and grandmothers and grandfathers. Support this legislation.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 25 seconds to remind the gentleman from Arizona that he should tell the seniors in Mesa that he has lined his own pockets with a benefit for Members of Congress which is 50 percent more generous than what he is willing to give the seniors in his home State, and that he and the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) voted against eliminating cost sharing for preventive benefits for seniors.

Now that again shows us how much they care for the seniors in Hartford or in Florida or in Arizona.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON).

Ms. CARSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, there is an old adage that says those that pay the piper name the tune. We are here tonight on a tune that was written by a $30 million dinner a few nights ago. As I understand it, the senior citizens were not allowed to even win door prizes for prescription drugs at that event. And $30 million would have undergirded the cost of prescription drugs for millions of seniors who need them across this country. Those that pay the piper name the tune.

When the nonpartisan Congressional Research Service did a comparison of the drug benefit under the Blue Cross/Blue Shield standard option available to Federal employees to the Democrat and Republican prescription drug plans, they found that the Republican plan would give about 40 percent of the coverage Members of Congress receive, but the Democratic would give comparable coverage. But those that pay the piper name the tune and obviously have now begun to get their thrill on Capitol Hill.

Mr. Speaker, the senior citizens still suffer with a headache or heartache from this incredible sham that the Republicans have offered.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER).

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say tonight we have an opportunity to provide prescription drug coverage under Medicare for our senior citizens. Tonight we are seeing an example of two different kinds of debate. Some people want to offer partisan rhetoric for political purposes. Others want to offer policy, policy which gives a solution to the challenge we have. The bottom line is we want to provide prescription drug coverage for our seniors.

It was quoted earlier this year, one of the advisers to the Democratic leadership said, "One of the biggest worries that our policy people had was that they would actually write a good bill."

We have a good bill before us. This is a bill that increases funding for Medicare by $350 billion, provides prescription drug coverage under Medicare, lowers the cost of prescription drugs now, guarantees all senior citizens prescription drug coverage, improves Medicare with more choices and more savings, and strengthens Medicare for the future.

The question is: What does that mean for the average senior citizen? The bottom line is under the plan that the gentleman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) is managing before the House of Representatives, we have an opportunity to save for senior citizens real money. The overall out-of-pocket drug costs would fall by as much as 70 percent according to the Department of Human Services with the plan we have before us today.

According to a Health and Human Services study released this week, the House Republican plan would provide real relief for seniors and disabled Americans. Those who now pay full retail prices would typically see the cost of each prescription cut by 60 to 85 percent. Their overall out-of-pocket drug costs would fall as much as 70 percent, all in exchange for an affordable premium of $34 a month.

It is projected that the average senior would save $940 a year as a result of this plan. We have a plan that takes $18 billion out of the pockets of the pharmaceutical companies and saves the average senior $940. It deserves bipartisan support.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, this is one of those proposals that is perhaps best considered very late in the evening when the cover of darkness can attempt to hide the shame of the proposal. This bill is about creating the appearance of doing something when it does nothing to improve the lot of our seniors. When we get right down to it, despite the charts, the Republicans have no plan. All they offer is a placebo based on privatization. I suppose we can call it a Swiss cheese plan, but seniors get all of the holes and no cheese. There is no guaranteed deductible, no guaranteed premium, no guaranteed benefit, and there is no insurance company that has ever offered a plan of this type; and most have said that they will not be able to provide a plan of this type.

It all centers on the Republican ideological insistence that we must privatize Medicare, and that is not a prescription for reform; it is a prescription for disaster.

This very day, one of their top leaders called the plan that Lyndon Johnson signed into law and upon which millions of Americans have relied, had the audacity to call it a Soviet-style plan. They did not like Medicare then. They have never accepted it, and they are determined to use this device to privatize it.

Further, we find in the fine print of the plan in the paragraph called "non-interference," a specific command that the administrator of this program cannot act to reduce costs. This figure of $18 billion has been pulled out of the air by a Republican Health and Human Services administrator. It has no basis in fact.

Rather, with this bill, the Republican leadership has once again pledged its allegiance to the pharmaceutical manufacturers whose price gouging forces our seniors to pay the highest prices of anyone in the world. Little wonder that those same manufacturers are continuing to pay for ads all over the country telling people that the Republican partners are great people for obstructing the help that our seniors so desperately need.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY).

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is an important night for the seniors in my community. I am proud the House is standing up for seniors who desperately need an affordable, permanent prescription drug plan under Medicare, and who need it right now.

The House plan gives America's seniors the right to choose the Medicare prescription plan that is best for them with catastrophic protection for the very costly illnesses, extra help for the poor who need it the most, and lower drug prices for all seniors using group buying power so drug companies will compete for our business and not the other way around.

That means for nearly half up Texas' seniors on Medicare, they will receive up to $2,000 of essentially free medicine each year that they need, and that is real help.

Thankfully, tonight we are rejecting the alternatives, alluringly irresponsible schemes that are simply too good to be true, schemes that would bankrupt Medicare within 10 years and leave our vulnerable seniors to face grim choices. I support the Republican plan, and my seniors do as well.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. BACA), who understands that the AARP opposes the Republican drug bill in its present form and says that it needs vast improvement before their members can support it.

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I stand in opposition to this shameful decoy that creates the illusion that it covers all seniors, when we know that it does not cover all seniors. It only covers someone as long as it only reaches a certain limit.

We have to make sure that all seniors are guaranteed coverage, make sure that they are able to get the kind of services that they need. Currently right now, they cannot even buy or put food on the table, and they have to decide between buying prescription drugs or not.

This is like an insurance plan in California, telling drivers they have the coverage, when in fact they have the coverage as long as there is no accident. The minute there is an accident, the premiums go up, and you lose the coverage. They are afraid. They are afraid to file a claim. This is the same situation that we are going to have here. We are going to have seniors that are afraid to buy drug prescriptions because their coverage will go up. They will continue to go to Tijuana and buy it cheaper because they do not have the coverage. This is shameful and a decoy. We should support the Democratic plan that covers all seniors and all individuals.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. RYAN), but in the course of doing that I want to mention that the Congressional Budget Office in their letter to us made clear that exempting Medicare prescription drug plans from Medicaid's best price drives down drug prices $18 billion for our seniors.

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to put one thing straight. The AARP does not oppose this bill.

But for the benefit of Members who are truly listening to this debate and trying to make up their minds, let me point out three distinct differences. The Democratic bill will have the consequence of pushing out private-sector-provided prescription drug coverage. The Republican bill supplements that. What the Democratic bill will do, will have the consequence of making sure that all those employers who are providing prescription drug benefits for their employees do not do so any more so the government will pick it up so we are needlessly forcing taxpayers to pay for a benefit that the private sector is already providing.

The Republican bill includes deeper discounts on prescription drugs than the Democrat bill does. The Democrat bill is a $1 trillion-plus bill that will do nothing more than make Medicare go broke faster. We have a problem. We have two problems. We need prescription drug coverage for our seniors. We need to give them access to deep discounts on their price of drugs, and we need to make Medicare solvent for the baby boomer generation. The Democrat bill fails in that area. The Republican bill delivers.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 seconds to myself to apologize to the Republicans and quote the actual words that I misspoke. The AARP does not oppose their bill, they just say that it requires improvements before our members would support their bill. I want the record to make it perfectly clear, while they do not oppose it, they do not support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT).

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I could not support the Republican bill because we have to have fairness. It does not offer fairness. As a matter of fact, I just completed a survey in Tennessee, and the fact is that prescription drugs are twice what they are in Canada and Europe and Asia. But that is not true just in Tennessee; it is true all over the country.

There are a lot of things we could do. The Bush administration could re-import those drugs from Canada right now, and we would get a break. We have a lot of people on the border that can go across the border and get prescription drugs, a 90-day supply. There are a lot of things that we can do that are not being done.

The United States Senate Democrats have a very good plan, and we ought to look at the Senate Democrat plan because we are not going to get any justice here.

I suggest to Members, vote "no." The fact is we are subsidizing other countries. We have got price gouging going on by the pharmaceutical companies at present. We need to give relief now, and prescription drugs should be part of the Medicare package.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. VITTER).

Mr. VITTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in proud support of this Republican prescription drug plan. Prescription drug coverage is absolutely critical for seniors today, and no senior should have to choose between paying for prescription drugs and paying for food or rent. So we are acting and we are producing a plan and we are passing a plan to give seniors choice. They can choose the plan that works best for their needs. It reduces their out-of-pocket costs for prescription drugs, gives them a lifetime benefit, and the plan is voluntary.

So if seniors have a plan already that they are happy with, they can stay with it. They are not going to get kicked out. But for those without coverage, this bill will help them get that coverage and cover those escalating costs of prescription drugs.

Seniors deserve a prescription drug benefit, not just talk, not just debate, and they deserve it today, and that is why we are going to act today, not talk, not debate but act, act responsibly and act within a budget that we can sustain over time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), pending which I would just like to remind all the seniors in the country to review all the votes that the Republicans took against their interests in coming to this useless bill which they have brought to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The gentlewoman from California is recognized for 3 minutes.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and thank him for his leadership and that of so many other members on the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Ways and Means for their leadership in making the distinction between what the Democrats would have proposed had the Republicans not been afraid of seeing a real prescription drug benefit plan on the floor tonight and their sham, their cruel hoax, on America's seniors that they have presented.

Why is it a cruel hoax? It is a cruel hoax because it helps pharmaceutical companies and HMOs and it does not help seniors pay for needed medication. It is a cruel hoax because there is no guaranteed coverage because insurance companies just will not offer plans. Our plan would have guaranteed coverage for all seniors through Medicare. Their plan does nothing to lower prices and ours would have lowered prices by enabling Medicare to negotiate on behalf of seniors. It goes on and on.

What is very important for me to note is that we spend annually $70 billion on doctors under Medicare, $140 billion on hospitals. It would be necessary to spend $90 billion on pharmaceuticals. It sounds like a lot of money, and it is. But it is a tremendous investment in the health of the American people.

The committee on which I serve that funds the National Institutes of Health, we have seen the progress in science since the inception of Medicare. It is miraculous what these drugs can do. Would it not be great if seniors could have the opportunity to have funding for self-administered drugs that is prevented so far and that the Republican bill does nothing to improve?

It would save seniors money. It would save the taxpayers money. Because these drugs are not only an adjunct to care and to hospitalization, they are a substitute for it. It would improve the quality of life, it would save the taxpayers money, and it would go a long way to restoring the dignity to our seniors which we owe them.

Every family in America, Mr. Speaker, is just one accident or one diagnosis away from sadness not only in terms of what it means to physical health but in terms of economic security. We have an agreement with the American people that their health is part of the strength of our country. Access and affordability are linked. Access to affordable prescription drugs is central to the health of our senior population. We owe them better than a debate on a sham bill that has no guarantee. It is a suggestion but not a guarantee. It is not a prescription drug entitlement under Medicare as what is promised and should be promised to our seniors. Again, it does nothing to address the issue of cost.

Every senior in America deserves the respect and dignity of economic and health security. The Republican bill is a cruel hoax on them. I urge a "no" vote.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 seconds.

Respectfully, how could a sham bill accelerate the pace at which technology will come into Medicare for the first time ever? And I am proud of it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI).

Mr. GRUCCI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time. When I went back to my district and I started talking about this program and this plan for senior citizens, I was wondering what kind of reception I was going to get, what they were going to say to me, the things that they would tell me.

One of the things I saw that really lit the fire of passion in my heart on this issue and on this particular bill was when I saw the hope in the eyes of the senior citizens when they recognized for the first time ever they were going to get help on their prescription drugs, that the cost of their prescription drugs was going to come down, that they were going to be able to put hundreds of dollars back into their pockets and they were going to be able to use that for the rhetoric that we keep talking about, to buy their food, to be able to put heat in their homes, so that instead of having to stretch their medicine, they could take it as prescribed.

I sat across the table from these senior citizens and they were not just telling me rhetoric, they were telling me how they have to live their lives. When they saw the benefits of this program coming in front of them, when they saw the opportunity to get their money back into their pockets, they had hope.

For that, Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues here tonight to have a "yes" vote on this particular bill.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT) is recognized for 1 minute and 40 seconds.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time, the great job she has done on the floor tonight and the great job that she and the committee have done with this bill.

This is a tremendous step forward. It provides so many things that seniors need. The amount of money allocated to this bill is possible. It is within budget. Health care providers and hospitals support this bill.

The AARP in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means said, "We are pleased that your bill makes the voluntary prescription drug benefit permanent and maintains the entitlement nature of the Medicare program."

This is something that can actually be done. It is within a real budget. It is an amount of money that can be spent for this purpose and can start immediately. It makes a difference in the lives of seniors.

Certainly health care delivery has changed dramatically since Medicare was created. This benefit needs to be added to Medicare. It needs to be an entitlement, not an experiment. It needs to be something that we do now, not come up with an amount of money that is impossible to do for years to come.

The amount of money allocated to this bill far exceeds the amount of money that our friends on the other side of the aisle said was necessary just 2 years ago. New drugs and devices would not be a result of a government-run health care program. They will be a result of a program that maintains incentives but guarantees lower cost, guarantees access, makes this an entitlement. It is supported by health care providers for a reason. The AARP says it has great merit for a reason.

We need to do this. We need to do it now. We need to make this a reality this year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 465, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) each will control 30 additional minutes of debate.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4954.

I first want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and all the members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce who spent over 30 hours of markup in producing this bill. I particularly want to thank my colleagues on the other side for the spirited but I think agreeably friendly debate we had that stretched over 3 days and ended up on Thursday when we started at 9:30 and completed at 8:30 the next morning.

This is a complex piece of legislation. I have heard people describe it on the other side as a hollow bill that contains no benefits. Let me make it clear, this is a bill that spends 350 billion of American taxpayer dollars that will create a valuable new entitlement for Medicare beneficiaries, that will finally provide them with prescription drug coverage, and it will do so in a comprehensive way, ensuring that the benefit will work within a stronger Medicare system for decades to come.

I do not speak just for myself. Let me quote a letter from the AARP. The letter from the AARP says our members and virtually all older Americans need this coverage now. They are tired of excuses. They are tired of politics. They want us to pass this benefit bill now.

Here is what they said about our bill. "We are pleased that your bill makes the voluntary prescription drug benefit permanent and maintains the entitlement nature of the Medicare program."

They went on further to say, "The bill contains other favorable components as well." They talk about the coverage of the first $2,000 in the bill and particularly the financial assistance for low-income beneficiaries with drug costs under $2,000 as being vitally important. They also mention, and I quote, we appreciate your efforts to contain drug costs because a Medicare drug benefit bill alone without effective cost controls will be difficult to sustain. They understand we cannot bankrupt Medicare. We have got to make this system work within our budget.

But they went on to say, "You can improve this. We don't like this home health copay." It is now gone. Our committee voted it out, and it is not in the bill.

They asked us to do what we could to close the gap, the $4,500 gap that existed between the first $2,000 of coverage and the catastrophic coverage. We found $18 billion by forcing the pharmaceutical companies to negotiate discounts below the so-called best price, $18 billion from pharmaceutical companies, and we lowered that loss from $4,500 of out-of-pocket expenses down to $3,700. We paid $800 more of drug cost in the bill now, exactly what AARP asked us to do.

Finally, they said, it is important, because our research indicates that Americans are looking for stability and dependability, to ensure that private sector entities will be willing to offer coverage.

We have a letter, too, from the Health Insurance Association of America and this is what their letter says:

"The improvements contained in the proposal should make the benefit more attractive to beneficiaries. Consequently, there is now a much better chance our members will offer the benefit."

We have a comprehensive plan, a permanent plan, a voluntary entitlement within Medicare that is within budget, that insurance companies say they will be able to work under it and provide plans and what CBO says as high as 97 percent of the seniors in America will find drug coverage and participate in.

This is a great bill. Seniors want it now. They are tired of politics. Let us pass it tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the chairman of our committee from Louisiana, and it bothers me because he is not looking at the bill. He is not talking about the Republican bill that is on the floor of this House. This is not a Medicare bill. This is not a Medicare program. There is nothing in this bill that is going to help the average American senior.

If you look at it, first of all, we know that it does not provide Medicare coverage, no guarantees. What it does is to give some money and throw some money to private insurance companies in the hope that somehow they are going to provide a Medicare benefit. The insurance companies have said they are not going to provide the benefit. If they were providing the benefit, we would not need a Federal program.

Let us imagine that somewhere, somehow, I do not believe it, but somewhere, somehow some private insurance company is willing to provide the plan the way the chairman describes. Why in the world would anybody buy into such a plan? Look at some of the figures that we have.

First of all, if I could use this chart, it shows very dramatically that the senior citizen is only going to get about 22 percent of their coverage paid for by the Federal Government, compared to the Democratic plan which was significantly more. Look at this so-called doughnut hole in coverage. In the beginning you are going to get, if it is even available, you will get some money in the very beginning, up to $1,000 and then up to $2,000 out of pocket. But then after that there is no coverage. For 40 percent of the beneficiaries, the average senior citizen, they are going to get no coverage during this interim period.

If you are going to be in a situation, either there is no plan at all, you do not have the advantage of a plan because the private insurance companies do not provide it, or, secondly, the premium is so high, the deductible is so high or it costs so much over the course of the year that it is not even worth buying.

Who in the world would want to buy the coverage even if it was available? The answer is nobody. That is the reality of this bill.

The other thing that really bothers me here is I have heard some of my colleagues on the Republican side tonight talk about how there is going to be a 30 percent discount. I asked the gentleman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), where is this in the bill? There is nothing in the bill that provides any discount here. She is assuming that there is going to be some competition to provide it, but they put a noninterference clause in the bill that prevents any price reduction. They do not want price reduction.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I note that New Jersey is going to receive $1.5 billion in Medicaid savings directly from this bill, and 40 percent of their seniors will receive subsidized coverage of their insurance premium.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Before I get into my remarks, I would say that the gentleman from New Jersey, as usual, does not listen. When the chairman read from the AARP letter, when they said, "We are pleased that your bill makes the voluntary prescription drug benefit permanent and maintains the entitlement nature of the Medicare program," that means it is under Medicare.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, I rise in support of the bill. I believe that today's vote is another example of our commitment to getting something done for seniors this year, not just talk about it this year.

The bill creates a new entitlement under Medicare. Senior citizens and persons with disabilities will now have access to a voluntary, comprehensive prescription drug benefit. Our bill creates this benefit without jeopardizing the financial health of the overall program, which would certainly happen under the plan offered by our friends on the other side of the aisle.

During the Committee on Energy and Commerce's consideration of the bill last week, committee Democrats offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute that, while not scored, would likely cost over $900 billion over 10 years. I was disappointed that they would offer such an irresponsible plan during such a serious debate, especially since, just last year, House Democrats included $330 billion for a new prescription drug benefit in their proposed budget resolution.

A benefit without explanations is, of course, no benefit at all. The counterproposal offered by my colleagues does not explain how they would fund this enormous program since they did not even offer a budget resolution this year. I repeat, they did not even offer a budget resolution this year.

The fact that they have now tripled the amount they say is necessary for a prescription drug benefit tells me that, instead of being serious about a solution, they care only about outbidding Republicans in an attempt to score a political point for the November elections. After all, as has been said before, they controlled this House for 40 consecutive years and at no time did they attempt to address this problem.

We are addressing it. We want to help seniors now, not just use political rhetoric.

Our plan provides Medicare beneficiaries with meaningful, comprehensive coverage. It does not force beneficiaries into a one-size-fits-all program where bureaucrats pick their medicines. Instead, seniors will have a choice of at least two prescription drug plans which will provide the best price discounts available. The bill also puts into effect an idea presented to me some time ago by Dr. William Hale of Dunedin, Florida, to offer at government expense an initial medical physical for all beneficiaries going into the Medicare program. It is easy to envision, I think, that many diseases will be picked up at that time in their early stages and, thus, result in more healthful retirement years and ultimate health cost savings.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4954 places an appropriate focus on two populations that have long been, as many know, a priority of mine: the low-income senior without prescription drug coverage and the very ill senior who is in danger of impoverishing him or herself in order to pay for their medications.

The bill we are considering today includes strong protections for these vulnerable beneficiaries. It fully subsidizes cost-sharing, except for nominal copayments for Medicare beneficiaries with incomes up to 75 percent of poverty. This feature means that 44 percent of our Nation's seniors, those with incomes less than $15,505 for singles and $20,895 for married couples, could be eligible for full cost-sharing assistance. Mr. Speaker, $20,895 for married couples, could be eligible for full cost-sharing assistance.

Our bill makes needed changes to the program by raising reimbursement rates. That has been talked about.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Senate follows our lead and passes a bill soon so that we can begin the process of reconciling our two packages later this year. This is a good bill, a responsible plan, not a perfect plan by any means, but intended to help our seniors now, and we need to support it.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), the ranking member of the subcommittee.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

The Republican HMO drug plan does several things.

First of all, it begins the process of privatizing Medicare. The Republican HMO drug plan gives 30 percent less choice, 30 percent less choice for seniors' prescription drugs. The Republican HMO drug plan is an entitlement for insurance companies, not for America's seniors. It does nothing to bring drug prices down. In fact, prices in the United States will continue to be, under the Republican plan, the highest, two, three, four times what they are in other countries, the highest prices in the world. And the Republican HMO drug plan gives benefits almost twice as good to Members of Congress as it does to America's seniors. As we can see on this chart, Members of Congress have a plan worth about $2,100. The Republican plan provides for America's seniors a plan worth about $1,300.

Now, why would our friends on the other side of the aisle come up with a plan like this that privatizes Medicare, that gives seniors 30 percent less choices, an entitlement for insurance companies, that most outrageously gives a much better plan to Members of Congress than it does to America's seniors? Why would they do that?

I think the answer to that, Mr. Speaker, came last Wednesday afternoon when our committee, the Committee on Energy and Commerce, adjourned early at 5 o'clock so that all of the Republican Members could troop off to a $30 million, that is $30 million fund-raiser underwritten by the American drug and the prescription drug industry where the money went to feed the coffers of Republican Party candidates. This fund-raiser was chaired by the CEO of one of the world's largest drug companies, the CEO of Glaxo, a drug company located in England, a foreign drug company. His company gave $250,000 to this Republican event. He was joined by $250,000 contributions from the trade association representing the drug companies and many others.

The question, Mr. Speaker, is of voting for a plan that is written by and for the drug companies or a plan for America's seniors.

So, the next day, when Members of Congress from our committee returned to vote on legislation, to vote on this prescription drug bill, surprise: every vote cast by my Republican friends, whether it was to make the seniors' plan the same as Members of Congress, whether it was to bring prices down, whether it was to reduce out-of-pocket expenses, every time these Republican Members of Congress voted with the drug companies.

It is a question of, do we vote for legislation written by and for America's drug companies, or do we vote for legislation written for America's seniors?

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, Ohio, under our bill, will earn $1.8 billion in Medicaid savings, and 38 percent of their seniors will get free premiums under our bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD), a distinguished member of our committee.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have been somewhat shocked, really, at the animosity expressed against our plan this evening. Medicare as it exists today uses private companies to administer the Medicare program. Under the Democratic plan, private companies will be used to administer their drug program, just as ours is.

I was looking, and in Kentucky we have 615,000 citizens under Medicare. Under this plan, the plan that we will be voting on and passing tonight, 315,000, or 50 percent of them, will basically receive free prescription drugs with a very small copay of like $2 for generics and $5 for name-brand drugs. So how could we possibly oppose helping seniors with this kind of a meaningful program?

We have heard a lot of discussion tonight about how horrible the drug companies are in America. I think they have the best research and development, and we are fortunate to live in a country where drugs are being discovered every day to cure serious diseases.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the support and passage of this legislation.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO).

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished ranking member for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak about an issue that calls to a need of the American people. This is really a solemn moment in this Chamber, and I regret enormously that my friends on the other side of the aisle did not have enough confidence in themselves to debate here tonight two plans, not just their plan. So since it is just their plan, that is what I am going to direct my comments to.

I know you all love your mothers and fathers. So do we. We all love our families. We are talking about the American family. We are talking about senior citizens.

Now when the American people go shopping for coverage for something, what do they want? They want something that is comprehensive, they want something that is affordable, they want something that is guaranteed, and they want something that is understandable. They have come to trust the gold standard that Medicare represents.

Now my friends on the other side keep using the word "Medicare." Do we know why? It is the best marketing word in the country. But look at the fine print. What they do is they put the language down for Medicare, but they take the taxpayers' money and shift to private insurance companies, with no guarantee that there is any insurance company that is going to bring them these benefits.

So American people: Beware. Beware of false advertising. This is no more a Medicare prescription drug plan than I am a redhead.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, the State of California will get $5.1 billion in Medicaid savings under this bill, and 1.5 million California seniors, including redheads, will get free premium insurance coverage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GANSKE).

Mr. GANSKE. Mr. Speaker, this is a $350 billion bill. Since when has $350 billion been pencil dust, I ask my colleagues. That is a third of a trillion dollars.

Mr. Speaker, 37 percent of Iowan senior citizens will have no copayment, deductible, or premium. They will get this benefit free. That is not pencil dust.

We have another problem that we have not addressed, and that is that in rural States like my State, rural hospitals and other providers, the rural hospitals are going broke and other providers are not taking care of, cannot take any more Medicare patients into their practices, and this bill addresses that. This bill addresses that.

Without this bill, we would have a 15 percent cut in physician payments. Without this bill, rural hospitals in Iowa will go bankrupt. This bill provides Iowa with $330 million in additional payments for Medicaid, and this is at a time when my State is struggling to meet its payments.

This bill helps seniors. U.S. Seniors endorses it, and Sixty Plus. It helps the providers like physicians to keep taking Medicare patients into their practices.

□ 0030

It helps keep the rural hospitals open. That is why it is endorsed by the AMA and the American Hospital Association. Ninety-five percent of seniors would find this a good deal and sign up for this bill.

This bill basically is a bird in the hand. That is worth more than two or three in the bush. Senior citizens in Iowa are telling me that $350 billion now will help a lot, and that is a lot better than an empty promise for two or three times more than that.

Mr. Speaker, a few winters ago, when Iowa was experiencing skyrocketing home heating bills, I received numerous letters from Iowa seniors who were forced to choose between paying their monthly heating bills or paying for their prescription drugs.

I don't believe that's a choice Iowans should have to make.

That is why this week, I have been working with my Energy and Commerce committee to pass the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002, which would provide a prescription-drug benefit for needy Iowa seniors through Medicare.

Although many members of the other party continue to treat Medicare as a political football, we are moving forward to provide immediate help to those who need it most.

Specifically, the bill includes an affordable and permanent prescription drug benefit with an average premium of $35 per month. The bill also includes a standard benefit that would begin with a $250 deductible and pay 80% of spending up to the first $1,000 and 50% up to the second $1,000. Seniors who meet the low-income criteria (50% of seniors currently without coverage) would pay less than $5 per prescription, up to coverage limits. All participants are protected against catastrophic costs, with out-of-pocket expenditures capped at $3,800 per year. An estimated 94% of eligible seniors in this country would participate in this plan in the first year, according to the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

In addition to the drug benefit, our legislation also provides a boost to rural Iowa hospitals that, for too long, have ranked last in the country in Medicare reimbursements. The bill provides increased equity for all hospitals in rural areas, as well as increasing payments to sole community hospitals, rural home health agencies, and rural ambulance services.

Congressman NUSSLE and I also have worked to amend the legislation to provide an increase of up to $40 million per year to Iowa's non-teaching hospitals.

These provisions are significant because the vitality of Iowa's rural hospitals is central to the economy of our state. Our bill would help ensure that Iowans living and working in rural areas have access to reliable and affordable health care.

Our prescription drug legislation contains significant provisions for lower-income Iowans. Benefit premiums for Medicare beneficiaries below 150% of poverty level would be fully subsidized, as would cost-sharing expenditures for beneficiaries under 175% of poverty. Premiums for individuals between 150% and 175% of poverty would be subsidized on a sliding-scale basis.

The Medicaid provisions would mean savings of $337 million dollars to Iowa's state budget—needed help to our state legislators who are struggling to balance the state budget.

Has the other party proposed, a prescription drug bill of their own? Yes—a bill that irresponsibly busts the budget and risks bankrupting the entire Medicare system.

Our legislation, on the other hand, provides an immediate $350 billion drug benefit and fits into the budget.

So, do Iowa's seniors want our prescription-drug benefit now, or the other party's empty promises of a drug benefit at some undetermined point in the future?

The answer is that Iowa seniors want help now—because they realize that a bird in the hand is better than two in the bush.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. DEUTSCH).

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this bill and the two proposals, one is in front of us and one was not allowed to be in front of us, really are fundamental policy differences. What the American people want is to have prescription drugs as part of Medicare.

When Medicare was created in 1965, there are two interesting statistics. One is that the average age of Americans was 65 in 1965. It has gone up by more than 10 years. I think we consider that a high-class problem.

The second interesting statistic is that the out-of-pocket payments by seniors in America, the percentage of their income has actually gone up, even with Medicare.

One of the main reasons for both of those statistics is because of prescription drugs. We cannot conceive of a Medicare program, which is an insurance program, it is a forced insurance program, and that has been Medicare's success, we cannot conceive of that being set up today without prescription drugs.

What my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are proposing, and I do not doubt the chairman of the full committee will cite a statistic about Florida saving Medicaid dollars after I finish speaking, but that is not Medicare, Mr. Speaker. That is not Medicare.

That is not what American seniors want. It is a sham. It is misadvertising for American seniors, and they get it. They get it, and they do not want it. They do not want what Members are proposing. What they want is simple. They want an expansion of Medicare coverage for prescription drugs, because they understand on a day-to-day basis that prescription drugs are a necessary component of Medicare, and eventually the American seniors are going to get what they want, regardless of the action that we take today.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Floridians, seniors under Medicare, over 1 million will have free premiums under this bill, and the State of Florida will receive $3.1 billion in Medicaid savings.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BURR), distinguished vice chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BURR of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate tonight for over an hour. I have heard the word "sham" and I have heard other words used. Those words are in fact about a benefit that we are going to extend to Medicare, a benefit that had not been extended since 1965, when Medicare was created.

Mr. Speaker, tonight we have a great opportunity. We have a great opportunity to pass a bill that is not perfect, but few things in this House are. We have the opportunity to extend for seniors for the first time coverage that the majority of Americans eligible for Medicare want and need. I do not think that is a sham; I think it is a tremendous opportunity for the Congress of the United States to pass for those individuals.

Some will get up and say that "GOP" is "get old people." Maybe they ought to change the words tonight to "GOPD, Get Old People Drugs." That is what we are here to do. If we can put aside partisanship, we can pass a bill that for the first time brings drugs to the American people.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN).

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell Members how disappointed I am that we are not discussing a Medicare bill that will really meet the needs of the American people.

We are not doing it on a bipartisan basis. Who would have thought this is a partisan issue? Both parties promised prescription drugs for seniors under the Medicare program in the last election, but the Republican plan that is before us today does not provide an adequate benefit. It does not help bring down the cost of drugs or stop excessive pharmaceutical company profits. It does not establish what the premium will be, or if it will be affordable.

Our Republican colleagues claim that the premium is set the same way the Medicare premium is now established; but that is wrong, and they know it. Medicare's premium is not set by a private insurance company that is interested first and foremost in its own profits. These premiums will be set just that way.

The Republican plan does not guarantee help with the cost of the drugs the physicians prescribe for us, and it does not ensure that we get our drugs at the local pharmacy. The fact is, this plan does not guarantee anything except subsidies for private insurance companies.

Let us put a real benefit in Medicare. Let us defeat this bill and give people the help they need. If they want to compare, for those seniors who are watching this, if they want to compare what they will get from the Republican bill and what they would have received from the Democratic bill if we had even had a chance to debate and pass it, go to the Web site. Go to www.House.gov/reform/min, and Members will be able to compare easily on that Web site what the reality is compared to all the promises we have heard from the Republicans.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The Chair would remind all Members to address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, not only will 43 percent of the seniors in California get subsidized premiums under this bill, but the State of California safety net hospitals receive over $63 million new dollars of help to provide health care.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD).

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I heard comments earlier tonight saying that we should not be debating so late, that nobody would be awake. My contention is it does not matter whether one is awake or asleep. We cannot get anything out of this kind of debate at all.

I do not believe I have ever heard more misrepresentations or mistruths or demagoguery on a subject in a long, long time. I could spend the night discounting some of the things, but some of the statements are just absolutely ludicrous, like people lining up over here saying that $320 billion going into prescription drugs is going to harm people. Who in the world thinks we are going to spend $320 billion of the taxpayers' money to harm somebody?

There are statements saying in 1964, Republicans hated Medicare; they voted against it. That is not true. That is not true at all. Republicans, in fact, the majority voted for Medicare, and not all the Democrats voted for Medicare in 1965. It was a discussion worth having back then.

But do not stand up here and say all Republicans hate Medicare. Those who continue to say that Republicans say Medicare is going to wither on the vine, I saw that speech. I have a copy of that speech. Newt Gingrich made the speech. He said that HCFA was going to wither on the vine, and that outdated organization needs to have some rework, because it is interfering with the care of patients, for pity's sakes.

There have been a lot of complaints about the rules, and not a lot of truths about the bill. This is not a perfect bill. I know that; Members know that. All of us could do better. Any one of us could write a perfect bill if we did not have to worry about a budget. We could write a perfect bill, all of us could, if we did not care about bankrupting the trust fund, but we do.

But I will tell Members what this bill will do. They can call it, say it, do any way they want to, but what this bill will do is it will help the poorest and help the sickest seniors. We need to do it now, because this is the only game in town.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

With all due respect to the last speaker, this is not a perfect bill; this is not even a good bill. Through all this debate, I went back to my office tonight and listened to all this.

I pulled two letters from my district, one from Vanderbilt, Michigan. A couple there has $6,288 per year in drug costs. Under the Democratic plan, if we would ever get a chance to vote on it, they would pay $1,637 and they would save $4,650, or 74 percent of their drug savings.

Underneath their plan, their bill here tonight, they would have to pay $4,096. They would only save $2,192, or 35 percent of their drug costs.

The other couple I pulled was from Travers City, Michigan. They have $3,240 per year on drug costs. Under the Democratic plan, they would pay $1,028 and save $2,212 or 68 percent. Under the Republican plan, they would pay $2,536 and save only $704, or 22 percent.

Do the math. The Republican plan just does not add up.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Michigan will get one and one-tenth billion dollars in this plan of Medicaid savings, and nearly 40 percent of their seniors will get subsidized premiums for their Medicare prescription drug coverage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WALDEN) from our committee.

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, if we think about this, nobody has fought harder for Patients' Bill of Rights in this country than the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD), the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GANSKE), and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. FLETCHER). They are unanimously in support of this bill.

These are careful legislators who have evaluated this bill carefully. They unanimously support it because they know it is within the budget. It will give care to those who need it the most. From the people that I represent, that is what is most important, that we put together a plan that will fit within the budget framework we have been given to operate under that will get them care, because they need help now. They need help now. They do not want partisan rhetoric. We are sick and tired of that in America.

This winter and spring, I went around and met with hospitals, doctors, patients, and seniors all across my district. The clear message was: get us help now; do what you can for us now. This bill does that. That is why organizations representing these doctors and hospitals and seniors and others support it.

It will help home health care; it will help Medicare patients. This is a good plan that will make a real difference for patients. It provides prescription drugs at no cost to those who make $15,000 or less a year in our senior community.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY).

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, watch out, Grandma. Watch out, Grandpa. The GOP doctors are on their way, and boy, do they have a prescription for you. Every senior citizen gets three bitter pills to swallow:

Pill number one is a half-dose of dollars. The Republicans provide less than half the money that Democrats provide to seniors in their plan so that they will not be burdened by the soaring cost of prescription drugs, but the Republicans will not allow a vote on that plan.

Pill number two is a poison pill for Medicare. The Republicans are diverting Medicare funds into risky private drug plans with no maximum premiums and no guaranteed coverage in a cynical drive to privatize the Medicare program. But they will not allow a vote to prevent the privatization of Medicare.

Pill number three is a privacy piracy. The Republicans allow the pharmaceutical fat cats to exploit Grandma and Grandpa's sensitive medical secrets in marketing schemes without their knowledge or consent, and they will not allow a vote to protect that privacy, which is inside of the Democratic bill.

"GOP," it used to stand for "Grand Old Party." "GOP" now stands for "get old people." Vote "no" on the Republican plan tonight.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, how dare any of the Members suggest they love their mothers and fathers more than we love our mothers and fathers. How dare they suggest that we dislike our grandparents and would feed them bitter pills, and get them. How dare they make that suggestion.

My mother is alive because of Medicare. Medicare saved her life not once but three times. We are here to fight for Medicare and to improve it tonight, Republicans and Democrats alike. They have a different plan than us, but we all love our mothers and fathers. We all love our grandparents. How dare they suggest otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are moving forward tonight with a very important bill for our Nation's seniors, our moms and dads and health professionals who care for them.

No senior should be forced to forego needed medications, take less than the prescribed dose or go without necessities in order to afford life-saving medication.

The bill before us tonight will provide much-needed comprehensive Medicare, prescriptive care for all seniors who elect to participate. For those who can least afford their prescriptions, Medicare will cover a hundred percent of these premium deductibles.

In addition to modernizing Medicare by adding a prescription drug benefit, the bill before us tonight will also help to ensure that Medicare beneficiaries continue to have ready access to high-quality community-based health care services.

The bill fixes flaws in the Medicare prescription fee schedules that are resulting in significant unintended cuts in physician payments. It also improves hospitals and skilled nursing homing reimbursement, eliminates a scheduled 15 percent cut in home health payments, puts a moratorium on the cap on physical therapy reimbursement, and takes a good first step in improving reimbursement for ambulance services.

It is a good bill. I urge my colleagues to votes yes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN).

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank my ranking member from Michigan for yielding me time.

It is hard to say in one and a half minutes how much is wrong with this piece of legislation. We should have the opportunity to debate alternatives to correct the problems, but the tyranny of the majority makes that mockery of democracy.

There is one major glaring problem that should be mentioned: the gaping hole in the coverage of the drug costs that exceed $2,000. If a senior has a $300 monthly drug bill, they can expect to lose their drug coverage halfway through the year. But they will have to keep paying month after month for the rest of the year until they reach that catastrophic limit.

Another problem is, if seniors have other coverage from an employer or maybe some help from their church or a charitable organization, these contributions will not count as out-of-pocket expenses for that senior. So that is wrong with the bill.

There is another major disincentive for employers to provide retiree health care. It will further erode what little health care coverage we have left in our country.

Diabetes is a major illness for seniors. This bill, granted, covers insulin, but it does not pay for the syringes. So those seniors have to pay to inject the insulin we will give them. What kind of sense does this make?

Mr. Speaker, there are so many problems with this legislation we should be allowed our alternative, providing a meaningful prescription drug benefit, but the Republican majority again is afraid to allow amendments to pass.

My Republican colleague from Iowa said that their bill is a bird in the hand, but seniors, when they find out what this bill does, will be left with only bird droppings in their hands.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the seniors of Texas will receive $1.9 billion in Medicaid savings under this bill; and 55 percent of them will have subsidized premium coverage. That is not bird droppings.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

There is an extra benefit that is being conferred by passage of this bill and that is to our veterans. Veterans are experiencing two phenomena that we can help remove here tonight. One is the higher cost of medications that they are experiencing, of course. All seniors will benefit from that. But there is another idea that we have to shake away from the existing scene about our veterans and that is the long waiting lines that they are experiencing at the VA hospitals.

In our central Pennsylvania area, some 6,000 are waiting to see a doctor in waiting lines, and their medications that will be prescribed are not waiting for them because of the long lines and because of the high costs of medication. Strike a blow here for your veterans as well as the other seniors by passing this legislation, reducing the cost of prescriptions to our veterans and reducing the long lines that they are now facing in and even waiting to see a doctor at VA hospitals for the purpose of medication.

Waiting lists at veterans hospitals across the country are growing. In central Pennsylvania alone there are over 6,000 veterans waiting to be seen. Nearly 70 percent of these veterans are rated as category seven by the VA, meaning that they have no service connected disability. In fact, the vast majority of them are seeking a meeting with a VA doctor solely in order to receive assistance with their medications. They are seeking help because of the high cost of their medications or because their health plan discontinued their pharmacy benefits.

Our new Medicare prescription drug benefit will reduce out-of-pocket drug expenses for Americans by 25–30 percent. That savings may help veterans in central Pennsylvania opt out of the long waiting lines at the veterans health care facilities in Lebanon, Camp Hill, Berks, Pottsville, and others. Veterans will be able to switch from their veterans plans to the plan we vote on today without penalty.

I have visited with VA officials in my district to discuss the problem of lengthening waiting lists. At the Lebanon VA hospital, I was told that nearly 1,800 veterans still wait to be seen by a doctor. Of those waiting, 65 percent are category seven and most likely waiting to get assistance with medication. I commended the caring individuals who run that acclaimed facility for providing outstanding healthcare. The Lebanon VA hospital has, in fact, received the highest patient satisfaction scores of all VA medical centers across the Nation. But I had to agree with them that we do not want to see these quality institutions simply turned into pharmacies. Furthermore, we do not want to see long lines of patients waiting to see a VA doctor when a drug plan that reduces their drug expenditures would work just as well.

One of the great benefits to come from passage of this prescription drug coverage bill will be the relief provided to veterans and VA hospitals. Vets will be able to choose this new drug coverage plan and opt out of the long lines at VA hospitals. Veterans who need help purchasing their medication will get real relief. Those who are waiting inordinate lengths of time on waiting lists to see a doctor at their local VA hospital may look forward to shorter waits and prompt services. Our veterans deserve no less.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND).

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, we need to tell the full truth about veterans and prescription drugs. This administration has raised the co-pay for medications that veterans get at our VA facilities from $2 to $7 per prescription, a $250 increase. That is the fact.

Mr. Speaker, the assets test provided under the Republican plan makes a mockery of one of the key objectives of the Medicare prescription drug benefit, to prevent senior citizens from having to pauperize themselves to get the drugs they need. Think what this means.

It means that a frail elderly woman who qualifies for a handicapped sticker on her car because she cannot walk a short distance cannot keep a car that she cannot be confident will not break down on the highway if she wants to qualify for the assistance she needs to get the drugs her doctor prescribes.

It means that a spouse who has managed to buy a burial plot, a burial plot so that they can lie for eternity next to a husband or wife may have to sell that plot to get the prescription drugs they need to survive. For shame.

Those of you who want to give a death tax elimination for the multimillionaires in this country have no problem with requiring grandma to give up her burial plot in order to qualify for the assistance under this plan. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

That claim is disingenuous. Section 1902 allows the States to waive that means test. There is an additional section, 1115 waivers are also allowed for the States, and they can waive that means test any time they want to.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee of Energy and Commerce.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not have a single new thing to say about this issue because it has all been said over and over again. But as I have been sitting listening to the debate for these last 2 hours and looking at it and listening to the howling and the shrieking and the bellowing and the clattering of pans, I could think of nothing more than the ancient times when there was an eclipse; and as the sun was eclipsed the ancients ran out and made some noise.

For decades, the Democrats claimed to be the party that represented and cared for the seniors. They did nothing for the prescription drug benefit. Finally, our plan is eclipsing their stature; and they cannot stand it; and they are bellowing and howling. When the sun comes up tomorrow morning, we will have passed the first prescription drug plan in the history of this program. The howling will silence, and the seniors will have something to be proud of. And I am proud of you, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) has 10 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND).

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the chairman of the committee. He says that the States can waive this requirement. In fact, they can not. The asset test was placed under title 18. The States are not able to waive this requirement under this bill.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield myself 15 seconds to indicate again that our information is the States have the power to exercise the waivers under this bill.

Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 14¾ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) has 9¾ minutes remaining.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE).

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, with this bill Congress should be keeping a solemn promise to our seniors. But what the Republicans are doing is giving simply a fig leaf instead.

This proposal covers only about 20 percent of the expenses that seniors will incur for prescription drugs in the next 10 years. Well, the Republicans say we are operating under budget constraints. We cannot afford to pay the 80 percent of the costs that the Democratic alternative would have offered had we been able to offer it. Why? Why do we have these budget constraints? Because their priority is not to give relief to the 40 million Americans who need the relief but to give it to the 500,000 of the very wealthiest Americans who want estate tax relief.

Take a look at this chart. Here is the number of seniors who need this prescription drug plan and need a thorough plan, 35 million. Here is the number of people who will benefit from the Republican estate tax cut that they passed a few weeks ago and that caused the budget constraints which are preventing us from passing a real benefit.

The seniors of America need to know this is why we cannot give grandma and grandpa their drugs. It is not because God came down and gave us these constraints. It is because the Republican caucus gave them to us.

Let me answer one more thing. Mr. STRICKLAND says that grandma and grandpa will not be able to buy their burial plots because of the assets test. That is under Medicare. That cannot be waived under title 18 by the State. It is nonwaivable.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL.)

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding me time.

The fact of the matter is that the bill that we are debating today is inadequate because there is inadequate funding for the bill; and the reason there is inadequate funding for the bill is, as the previous speaker pointed out, all the money has been used up with tax relief for the very wealthy in this country, $1.6 trillion worth of tax relief for the very wealthy people in the country. So, of course, when it comes to a prescription drug benefit we do not have enough money to provide a real meaningful plan.

We would like to debate the Democratic bill along with the Republican bill here, but we were denied the opportunity. So we do not have the ability to show why our plan is better.

The fact of the matter is, our plan is better. It will cover more seniors. It will give an entitlement under the Medicare program which is really what seniors want.

The bill we are debating today does not provide any real guaranteed benefit and simply, in my opinion, lays the groundwork to eventually privatize Medicare. The bill does not contain the entitlement to a defined benefits package as provided in the rest of the Medicare program. It only promises that seniors can shop for some kind of coverage undefined either through private insurance plans or Medicare HMOs. The bill does not contain, again, any defined premium or assurances that prescription drugs will be affordable; and it will cover less, and listen to this, it will cover less than one-fifth of the estimated drug costs of Medicare beneficiaries over the next 10 years. There is a large gap in the coverage.

Seniors who needs more than $2,000 worth of the drugs in the calendar year must pay for 100 percent of their drugs until they reach $3,700. So what we are seeing here is a woefully inadequate bill, and it is an indication where sometimes when you have something it is worse than having nothing.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill that has been described as so terrible will give to the State of New York $4.5 billion of Medicaid savings. It will cover 51 percent of New York seniors with subsidized premiums paid for by the government and will provide safety net hospitals in New York with nearly 90 million new dollars. What a terrible bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy and Air Quality of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my distinguished chairman and simply tell him I am glad to be on the floor backing him up, and I look forward to tomorrow delivering one of his famous cookbooks to one of my dearest friends down in Texas who has indicated to me you need to be backed up tonight with great, great enthusiasm.

I would like to tell my good Democratic friends that I agree with them on one point, and that is the fact that the rule should have allowed you to offer your substitute. I think it would have been a neat trick to have almost to a person voted against an increase in the debt ceiling of $450 billion and then turn right around and voted for a $1 trillion expansion of a brand new entitlement program 2 hours later.

I think this is a good bill. The provider part of it is almost universally supported. I think the prescription drug benefit is a good start. I think it could be improved.

I would like at some point in time to have the ability to offer the additional option of a prescription drug savings account. Many in my district, over two-thirds of the seniors that I have talked to, have said that they would probably opt for some sort of a drug savings account if they were given that option, and I hope that later this year we could do that.

This bill that is before us for over half of the seniors in this country would pay nothing for prescription drugs except a small copayment for the specific drug that they had to use, and I would point out that prescription drugs for most of our seniors are not of a catastrophic nature. They are of a chronic nature. They are to treat heart disease or to treat high blood pressure or cholesterol. They are something they have to take to have a lifestyle that we want them to have.

So I think my idea of a prescription drug savings account would give them a lot of options to do that, and again, I hope that we have the opportunity to offer that at some point in time.

To start the ball rolling, I agree that this bill is a good start and hope we will vote for it later this evening.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mrs. CAPPs).

Mrs. CAPPs. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding time to me; and, Mr. Speaker, for seniors in my district, there is no issue more important than prescription drug coverage, but the bill before us will not offer my seniors what they need.

First, it entices insurance companies to offer the drug coverage plans. In fact, it gives them the money without any guarantee of a benefit for seniors. Medicare+Choice has shown us that just relying on private insurance companies does not work.

Second, under the majority's proposal, as a senior's drug costs increase, their benefits decrease. In fact, once a senior's costs exceed $2,000, a senior has to spend another $2,900 on their medications before they will get any help.

This chart here, the GOP plan, shows a calendar for seniors. Many seniors in my district pay $400 a month. This senior paying $400 a month will get no benefit during the first month while he is paying his deductible; but then he will get a benefit, February, March, April and May. Unfortunately, then he reaches that $2,000. No more benefit for this senior for the entire rest of the month, and we call this is a drug benefit for our seniors? This is the plan we are voting on tonight because we have no alternative.

We are not allowed to bring a plan that our side has developed that would offer affordable, reliable prescription drug coverage for all under Medicare. For our $25 premium, $100 deductible, seniors would get 80 percent coverage of all their medications. This person during this time of having no coverage is not allowed to rely on a church who wants to step to their aid or family members or if they have a pension plan because of their services, they cannot use that.

This plan is the one that we must vote "yes" or "no" on tonight. We do have many alternatives. The one we wanted to put up would be a good and fair plan. No opportunity to do that because the majority is so afraid that they will lose the opportunity to do the things that they know in their hearts they should do for this Greatest Generation. We owe our seniors a better plan than this one.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, would the Chair again advise us how much time remains on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) has 7½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 9¼ minutes remaining.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FERGUSON).

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me the time.

We have heard a lot tonight about facts and figures and partisan rhetoric and attacks and misrepresentations. Some of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle earlier tonight suggested that we talk about or focus on senior women. I would like to do that for a second, one in particular, my mother.

My mother, Roberta, was diagnosed almost 5 years ago with cancer, deadly form of cancer, should have been dead by now. She is alive today, thank God, because she has had access to good medical care and prescription drugs that have saved her life. Why is that so important? Because without it, she never would have met her grandkids. Our kids, 3 and 2 years old, she never would have met them. Thank God she had access to these life-changing, life-saving products, because of scientists and researchers and companies who invest hundreds of millions of dollars, indeed billions of dollars, to find the miracle cures of tomorrow.

We have to make these miracle products affordable and accessible to everyone because our seniors are too important to let this opportunity sneak by. Our grandmothers want to meet their grandkids. Let us make it happen. Pass this plan tonight.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who has been half awake for the last 2 years knows that for Republicans tax cuts for the wealthy are far more important than prescription drugs for seniors. In the room upstairs, Republicans can call Medicare a Soviet-style program; but down here on television, they say they are providing a Medicare benefit.

The Republican plan relies on private, stand-alone prescription drug insurance plans. They do not even exist now, and they probably never will. No guaranteed benefits, no guaranteed premium, no guaranteed reduction in price. Their plan is an empty promise.

We have been asked where is our plan. The truth is my colleagues will not let us vote on it. Why? Because they know that a real Medicare benefit would reduce prescription drug prices. That is not acceptable to the pharmaceutical companies, so it is not part of the Republican bill.

Many Americans may be confused by this debate. All these numbers, estimates, projections. Just remember that Republicans get most of the money from HMOs and pharmaceutical companies. This bill is great for them, but it is a fraud on America's seniors.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the great citizen of Maine that their citizens, their seniors, 40 percent of them will get subsidized and mostly fully subsidized premium coverage under this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. BRYANT), a member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me the time, and I thank the chairman for making a priority of our committee to bring forth this first prescription drug benefit that is going to be available to people eligible for Medicare.

I think it is a good bill. It offers low-cost drugs. I think it guarantees insurance coverage, and it is all done in a fiscally responsible way. It fits within our budget, and I thank again the chairman for doing this.

I know our folks in Tennessee, we have about 700,000 senior citizens, and about 45 percent of those senior citizens will be eligible for virtually cost-free drugs under this plan; and I know those citizens in Tennessee that are dual eligible, that are covered, are qualified both in Medicare and Medicaid, that would result in, when this program picks up those people from the State, in a savings of about $565 million over the years 2005 to 2012.

So, Mr. Speaker, again I commend the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) for bringing forth this very good bill and making it a priority of this Republican Congress to give us our first-ever prescription drug benefit in the Medicare system outside the hospital.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PHELPS).

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for what he has done in the leadership in this particular subject that has brought us here tonight.

I rise in opposition to this plan and sadly because the rhetoric I guess tonight comes to an end. After promises from both sides of the aisle and those who have run an election for the last several years who promised to do something on this particular subject, we fall short and it is sad because I wanted to come to this body to have a true, fair debate on subjects of great priority like this, not to debate at 1:00 a.m. in the morning where we hide things from people, to say just one plan is the best plan, it is the only plan. That is not what we are about.

I am not here to promote adversity. I do not want conflicts. I want us to come together in a bipartisan manner to try to solve the very best of all plans, not just say one plan is the only plan, and say, Illinois, that I know that the gentleman is about to quote how many millions of dollars we are going to receive and help, but what could we have received? That is the question. Those people out there, constituents that I represent, will never know until the true light of day is shed on my colleagues' plan, and that is what we intend to do.

They have limited us to debate here tonight, trying to get one side of our plan more clear, under handicap conditions. That is not what we are about. That is not why we were elected, to have one party or a majority party have the only plan to make it deceptively look like it is a positive plan.

That is why we are here tonight, to debate the best, the most priority issue in the Nation, not in the wee hours in the morning just one plan, but a fair plan for all the best of all plans.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to let my friend know that the great State of Illinois will get a great fair share of this bill, about $2 billion in Medicaid savings, and about half a million of his senior citizens will get totally free premiums for their Medicare premium drug insurance coverage. That is a pretty good deal, pretty fair.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER), a distinguished member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, it took me 3 years to redesign the pharmacy benefit of military health delivery system. As the only Member of this body in this Congress to offer a prescription drug bill that has been passed and signed into law, I want to share a few observations.

Number one, I want to thank the gentleman from Hawaii (Mr. ABERCROMBIE) because we worked in a bipartisan fashion, something that has not occurred here.

Secondly, we were able to modernize a program without dulling the cutting edge of new prescription drugs.

Missing from this debate is the celebration of capitalization, a free enterprise system that avails the great minds of the world, the incentives to form at-risk entities to push the bounds of modern medicine and pharmacology to the benefit of our people and the improvements in their quality of life.

Please do not demonize these scientists and those in the medical community. Americans are living longer with many chronic illnesses. Why? Because modern medicine and the best health care system in the world is giving them that chance. Access to these drugs is what is important. That is what the Republican drug plan is going to do.

Please vote for this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, first of all, this bill tonight, I have listened very carefully. It is a relief act for the insurance industry. That is what it is.

Also, the Republican plan is not a fair plan. It is not going to help all seniors. Think about that. That is the fact. It does not cover them. There is no real guarantee at all, and many of them keep getting up and saying this is the first plan. That is all they want to go out and say, this is the first plan. It does not mean anything except it is the first ever, and it is not worth doodley squat. So they run with that.

So we have got to think of three things. It will not cover all the seniors. Imagine this, seniors having to run around, trying to shop around and find a plan. That is a big hassle for older Americans. They cannot contend with all these various insurance plans that come and go. We do not know how the model is going to work. Those of us who have been around, we know it did not work in 1965; and this is just another part of it. It is not going to work now.

We should be sure tonight to vote against this relief act for the insurance agencies.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am pleased to let my dear friend, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), know that the poor seniors in her State, over 1 million of them, will get free insurance drug coverage under this bill. That is 42 percent of her seniors and the State will get $3.1 billion of Medicaid assistance.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAUZIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Florida for 15 seconds only.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I did not say poor seniors. I said all seniors.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am saying all seniors are going to get helped, but the poorest will get totally free insurance coverage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. FLETCHER), a new member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, again, prescription drugs for our seniors is probably the most pressing health care issue that we face, and I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce for his leadership in bringing this to the floor, a plan that is reasonable, responsible and doable, unlike a plan that was brought up in our committee and will be brought up in the recommit motion. That is a plan that scores out at $973 billion with absolutely no way to pay for it.

That means you are either going to have to increase taxes on our children, grandchildren or you are going to have to take it from education, national security, homeland security, or Social Security. Those are the only choices you have.

Let me talk just briefly. Two years ago there was a $303 billion prescription bill plan. Who supported that? Virtually every single Democrat supported that. What happened this year? I think they have had an election year epiphany. All of a sudden, it is an election year; and we need three times as much money for it to be a reasonable plan. Is it not amazing that when we offer a plan that is reasonable, doable, it will be a plan that will provide benefits for every senior?

Let me talk about Kentucky. There are 615,000 Medicare beneficiaries that will receive help with this. Fifty percent of those in Kentucky are at 175 percent of the poverty level or below, which means they will be subsidized. It means $459 million for Kentucky. We are a small State, but $459 million for Kentucky, and those dual eligible for Medicare and Medicaid will get help. We are having trouble meeting our budgetary needs, so this bill is the right kind of a bill. It is a responsible bill, it is a reasonable bill, it is a doable bill, and they thought it was 2 years ago, but now in an election year, no, it is not enough.

I think we need to lay aside election-year politics, pass this thing on a bipartisan basis, and let us do what our seniors need, provide them a prescription drug bill and help for our States.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I notice that my friends on the other side of the aisle talk about giving free coverage to poor seniors except for the $2,700 out of pocket they would have to pay under the Republican private insurance plan.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Missouri (Ms. MCCARTHY).

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am in opposition to the measure before us and in support of the Democrat alternative that was denied.

I rise today in opposition to H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002. This "Insurance Company Protection Act" will not provide an affordable and dependable benefit for seniors. The Democratic substitute, which is being denied consideration by Republican leadership, provides comprehensive prescription drug coverage and savings to employers.

The "Insurance Company Protection Act" is an effort to privatize Medicare. This bill shifts $68 billion in health care costs onto employers, by designing the benefit so that private plans are required to cover prescription drug costs. As a result of this increase in costs for employers, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimates that one third of seniors in employer sponsored retiree plans will be dropped, leaving three million seniors who currently have employee based retiree coverage owing more for prescription drugs after this law is enacted.

The "Insurance Company Protection Act" threatens our local pharmacies. With myriad medications, seniors rely on their local pharmacists for advice and help in the management of their prescriptions. This legislation does not allow any pharmacy to be applicable for the prescription drug program, breaking many long standing relationships between pharmacist and patient.

Instead of shifting costs onto employers and seniors losing their coverage, the Democratic proposal offers a universal benefit with a $25 a month premium, $100 a year deductible, 80 percent of costs paid by Medicare, and a $2,000 out of pocket limit per beneficiary per year. It provides low income subsidies to ensure that every senior can afford to participate in the Medicare Prescription Drug Plan. In addition, physicians would have received a true solution to the Medicare payment problems that threaten the program today.

The Rules Committee had an opportunity to produce a bill that provides sufficient drug coverage for our seniors by allowing a vote on the Democratic substitute. Instead, the House will vote on a plan set by industry, the "Insurance Company Protection Act," that provides no entitlement under Medicare, an inadequate and ill defined benefit, and no equality for seniors in different parts of the country. Seniors cannot even be assured that the drugs they are prescribed will be covered, or that they will be able to continue their trusted relationship with their pharmacist. With these provisions, it is not difficult to understand why every senior group opposes the bill before us. I urge my colleagues to vote against the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend, the gentleman from Washington State (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, why should the senior citizens of America have to settle with a big gamble about whether they are going to get prescription drugs? Why should they have to gamble that maybe, maybe an insurance company will show up when no insurance companies exist on the face of this planet today to provide this service?

When one thinks about this, the Republican plan does not provide drugs. It provides a pair of dice to roll, and that is not good enough for senior citizens. Now, you do provide them a chance maybe some of them will get prescription drugs, but this generation has taken enough chances. It took chances on Omaha Beach, it took chances on Iwo Jima, and it should not have to have a crapshoot to see whether or not they are going to be able to get prescription drugs, and one would think after the abject failure of Medicare+Choice that you would not place your bets on a horse that has gone lame all over this country time and time again.

Mr. Speaker, we ought to reject this pathetic excuse and pass a real meaningful Medicare plan.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER).

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, we have had a lot said on this floor tonight, but what really is going to count is what is said when we get out there talking to those seniors that we are trying to help here tonight.

I traveled all over my district and collected pill bottles from those seniors, and I know how they feel, and they are going to ask some tough questions of us. If this plan passes, they are going to want to know and they are going to hand me that list of medicines they have been prescribed by their doctor and they are going to ask, are these medicines going to be covered under this plan? And if you give them an honest answer, you are going to have to say, I do not know, because you do not know.

They are going to say, how much is the premium going to be for this plan? If you give them an honest answer, you are going to say, I do not know. That is going to depend on what the insurance company that is going to carry this plan is going to charge you.

Then they may look at you and say, well, can I get this plan at my local pharmacy? You know the answer to that one. The answer is no. You are going to have to get it through mail order.

And if you look at them again and they say, this does not sound like too good a program, how do I know that this program is going to be there? The answer is you do not know because those Medicare HMOs have not been there for our seniors.

So I think what we have got to do tonight is be honest with our seniors and tell them we are passing a sham tonight, a sham that means nothing to these seniors, and what we have got to do is pass a real plan, a real Medicare plan for our seniors.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this bill. The skyrocketing cost of prescription drugs is a bitter pill to swallow, and the Republican leadership's refusal to let us consider the Democratic proposal is simply bad medicine for America's seniors.

My colleagues, last year, I conducted a study which showed that seniors in Westchester County are paying from 57 percent to 128 percent more than their counterparts in six foreign countries for the five drugs most commonly used by seniors in the United States. It also revealed that three medications frequently prescribed to seniors increased in price by at least twice the rate of inflation.

These statistics reveal to us over and over again the depth of the problem, which is growing worse by the day. Clearly, America's seniors deserve more than a hope and a prayer when it comes to ensuring their health and well-being.

The bill under consideration would, unfortunately, not guarantee benefits for seniors. Instead, it would pay subsidies to insurance companies in the hopes that they will establish drug-only insurance plans for Medicare beneficiaries. Under the Democratic plan, which we were not able to really debate this evening, Medicare would provide voluntary prescription drug coverage for all Medicare beneficiaries.

It is simply unconscionable that the Republicans are denying us a vote on the Democratic bill because perhaps they feel their Members will join us in voting for a real prescription drug benefit.

I also note that congressional action on provider payment increase and protections for Medicare-Plus Choice is long overdue.

Let us vote for a real plan. Let us have a real debate. Let us vote down this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), who will explain why the Democratic plan is written for America's seniors and the Republican plan is written by and for America's drug companies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am Mr. JOHN DINGELL. My dad was the original author of Medicare. He wrote it for and under Harry Truman's guidance and tutelage. It was a great piece of legislation. It took us 10 years to get it enacted into law. I sat in the Chair when we passed it. The Republicans, after years of fighting it, finally came along and supported it because they saw the handwriting on the wall.

I know Medicare, and this fraudulent proposal that is before the House is not Medicare. What it is is a subsidy for the insurance companies. We give a pile of money to the insurance companies that they can spend any way they want.

The counsel of the committee was inquired of by me for about 20 minutes. He could not tell us of any constraints on the insurance companies or any rights of the insured that would be protected under this Republican legislation.

That is why this is bad legislation. The insurance companies can take this money and spend it any doggone way they want, dividends, or they can give it in corporate executive salaries and bonuses. That is why it is a bad bill.

The Democratic bill is a very simple bill. What it does is it says, you pay $25 a month, you get 80 percent of your prescription pharmaceuticals paid for by the government, and you pay 20 percent of the cost yourself. Very simple, very understandable, very plain. No great big donut hole, no disqualifications for having your expenditures counted, and you get your benefits all year round. Not like this sorry mess that my Republican colleagues would foist upon our senior citizens.

This is a bad proposal. This is a bad process. This is a situation where we do not get an honest chance to either offer an amendment or see to it it is properly explained.

But I would note one thing. Every honest senior citizen organization in the United States says this Republican bill is a bad bill, and AARP says it needs significant improvement before they can support it.

We want to give the American senior citizens Social Security in good form, Medicare in proper form, and a Medicare benefit which will take care of their needs for prescription pharmaceuticals when they come. No longer should we have a situation where American senior citizens have to decide whether they are going to pay their rent or whether they are going to eat or whether they are going to get their prescription pharmaceuticals. That is wrong.

Our bill corrects that. The Republican bill does not. Vote against their bill. Vote for the motion to recommit and my colleagues will serve their constituents well, especially their seniors.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD a letter written to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) from AARP, which was referred to earlier.

AARP,
June 18, 2002.

Hon. W.J. TAUZIN,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Commerce,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN TAUZIN: Thank you for your initiative to move legislation through the House this year that will address the important need for prescription drug coverage in Medicare. As you know, AARP's top priority is available and affordable prescription drug coverage for all Medicare beneficiaries.

Our members, and virtually all older Americans, need this coverage now. They cannot wait any longer for protection against the increasing costs of prescription drugs.

We are pleased that your bill makes the voluntary prescription drug benefit permanent and maintains the entitlement nature of the Medicare program.

The bill contains other favorable components as well. For the approximately 50 percent of beneficiaries who are estimated to have annual prescription drug costs of $2,000 or less in 2005, the initial level of coinsurance in the bill should be attractive. Likewise, the financial assistance for low-income beneficiaries with drug costs under $2,000 is vitally important.

We also appreciate your efforts to contain drug costs because a Medicare drug benefit alone, without effective cost controls will be difficult to sustain as our growing population of older Americans increases its drug utilization. While we want to ensure that cost containment mechanisms result in meaningful savings, it is critical that these mechanisms do not impede access to needed medications.

More needs to be done to ensure that a final bill provides a benefit of value to our members and a program in which Medicare beneficiaries will enroll. As the process moves forward, the issues of funding adequacy, structure, benefit viability, and other Medicare changes like the home health copay, need to be addressed.

A voluntary drug benefit must attract broad enough participation to avoid the dangers of risk selection. Our research shows that beneficiaries assess the value of the benefit by adding up the premium, coinsurance, and deductible to determine if it is a good buy. The existence of a large coverage gap is a strong disincentive to enrollment. More funds are needed to close this gap and protect the viability of the program.

Unfortunately, a substantial amount of the already limited funds allocated for a prescription drug benefit have been diverted to pay for provider reimbursement increases. We believe that providers should be paid fairly for treating Medicare patients, but Medicare beneficiaries have waited long enough for relief from high prescription drug costs. Every dollar allocated to "givebacks" package means one dollar less for a Medicare drug benefit. We firmly believe that agreement on an affordable Medicare prescription drug benefit should be reached before Congress considers additional provider reimbursement increases.

Our research also indicates that older Americans are looking for stability and dependability in coverage. Therefore, it is important to ensure that private sector entities will be willing to offer coverage.

AARP's goal is enactment this year of an affordable Medicare drug benefit that is available to all beneficiaries. This bill requires improvements before our members will provide their support. We want to work with you to assure adequate funding and resolve other issues as the process moves forward and before any legislation is enacted into law.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM D. NOVELLI,
Executive Director and CEO.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, this debate tonight should not be about politics. American seniors have heard all the politics they can stomach. And the AARP said it best in their letter. They said, "Our members, virtually all older Americans, need this coverage now." What coverage were they talking about? They were talking about the coverage in this bill.

Here is a quote from the AARP, and I am sorry my colleagues are in such disagreement with the AARP, but here is their quote. "We are pleased that your bill makes the voluntary prescription drug benefit permanent and maintains the entitlement nature of the Medicare program."

Now this is not also about who loves their mother or father the most or their grandparents the most or who is willing to step up to the plate and do what they can to make sure that American citizens in their senior years have prescription drug benefits. This is about whether or not we have a plan that works. We think it does, and the AARP agrees with us.

Now let me make another point. We have heard a lot about the drug companies. I want to give my colleagues a Clinton administration statistic. The Clinton administration estimated that seniors without drug coverage pay 20 percent more for their drugs than anybody else in America with drug coverage. This bill will give seniors drug coverage. It will reduce the cost of their drugs at the expense of the pharmaceuticals.

We had the courage in the Committee on Energy and Commerce to do something our friends on the other side would not do. We got rid of the floor that pharmaceuticals will not negotiate below, and we forced the pharmaceuticals to spend $18 billion more, lowering the cost of drugs by eliminating that floor.

This is a great bill for Americans. This makes for a great savings on the drug bills of moms and dads and grandparents. We ought to vote for it tonight.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, This GOP drug bill is nothing but a candy-coated placebo that fails to cure the problems faced by million and millions of senior citizens who are struggling every single month to pay for life-saving prescription drugs.

The American people are just not going to swallow it.

If the FDA approved a drug that was this untested and unreliable, there would be an outcry across this great Nation for immediate congressional investigations.

Three words say it all: It won't work.

This ideological plan—which depends on private insurance drug only policies—even has insurers scratching their heads.

As Bill Gradison, our former Republican colleague in this House and the former head of the Health Insurance Association of America, recently said: "I'm very skeptical that 'drug only' private plans would work."

There's no guarantee insurers will offer drug only policies.

There's no guaranteed monthly premium. There's no defined benefit for seniors. There's no guaranteed access to the drugs you need.

The only guarantee in this bill is that it would provide inadequate coverage.

Everyone of us knows that the Republican party really wants to privatize Medicare.

This bill is the first step. A few years ago, the majority leader even told the Chicago Tribune that he "deeply resents the fact that when I'm 65, I must enroll in Medicare."

In sharp contrast, Democrats want to create a plan under Medicare that's affordable, guaranteed, universal, and voluntary.

The only argument that our Republican friends can muster against the Democratic plan is cost.

But these are the same folks who voted to give Enron $250 Million, who voted to give a handful of other corporations billions more, who voted to eliminate the estate tax on the wealthiest estates in the country.

Vote against this shameless drug bill.

Let's adopt a plan that gives seniors the drugs they need and deserve.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act. It's a sad day for seniors all across this country and especially in my congressional district in New Mexico. It is sad because the Republican leadership has decided that the House will only consider their pharmaceutical company-backed Medicare prescription drug benefit program.

The majority does not seem to care about making affordable prescription drugs available to all of our seniors. Instead, they only care about making political capital at the expense, literally, of our low income-seniors. For Congress after Congress, Democrats have called for making affordable prescription drugs available to seniors. And now that the Republicans fear losing their majority, they have brought a bill forward that has been industry-bought and industry-paid for.

The Democrat alternative that we have proposed, and that the majority refuses to allow us to debate, has been bought and paid for by the American people, many who are seniors that have sent us here to represent their interests and not the interests of America's pharmaceutical companies. Our bill which has been endorsed by most senior advocacy groups would charge a $25 monthly premium and a $100 deductible and require co-payments of 20 percent up to $2,000. After that amount, the government would pay all costs. The Democratic plan has no gaps in coverage and low-income seniors are protected under our plan. The majority says it is too expensive. Why? Because all the money was spent last year on the $1.3 trillion Bush tax cut for the wealthy few.

The Republican proposal is a ridiculous sham that has been introduced to fool our senior citizens into believing that they will finally have a prescription drug plan under Medicare that works. Republican strategists believe that their passage of any drug bill will inoculate their candidates against criticism. Even the spokesman for House Republicans' campaign committee has been quoted in the Washington Post as saying, "The fact that the House will have passed a prescription-drug bill will take away the Democrats' ammunition, and will make Senate Democrats look worse for failing to pass it."

Are you kidding me? This shouldn't be about politics. It should be about policy. Prescription drugs are nothing more than a political game to the majority. Frankly, this is slap in the face to every American senior and not to mention insulting.

My poor constituency in New Mexico cannot afford the outrageous prices of prescription drugs. Many of them drive hundreds of miles across the U.S./Mexico border to buy affordable prescription drugs. Many of them have to go without paying their bills in order to afford prescription drugs. Many of them have to forgo buying groceries, clothes, and other basic necessities to afford prescription drugs.

We owe it to America's seniors to do the right thing and propose a plan that offers a real prescription drug benefit. We owe it to America's seniors to be able to debate a plan that offers real prescription drug benefits. We owe it to America's seniors to debate our bill.

Our seniors deserve a prescription drug plan that works with a defined benefit plan, guaranteed premium and access, and protection for low-income seniors. The democratic alternative is the real prescription drug plan and not hoax on low-income seniors.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on H.R. 4954. Send this back and give us a fair vote on a real prescription drug plan.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4954, the Republican Pharmaceutical Industry Protection Act, is a cruel and unusual joke perpetrated against the senior citizens of America. The Republicans are preoccupied with the goal of the prescription drug manufacturers which is to maintain the highest possible prices and profits in America. Without operating at a loss in foreign markets, these drug companies sell their products at much lower prices. They sell at lower prices because foreign government negotiators refuse to pay exorbitant prices. In suits are added to injuries when Americans are forced to pay the highest prices for drugs which our Government often play a major role in research and development. A workable and simple plan offering the necessary benefits to seniors in need can be set in motion immediately. First, lower the cost of prescription drugs by following the principles and procedures set forth in my bill, H.R. 4772, the Pharmaceutical Products Price Equity Act which I first introduced on September 25, 2000. This bill ensures that pharmaceutical companies cannot charge more than 6 percent above the average retail price of prescription drugs sold in the 5 most industrialized, free-market countries. This will ensure that pharmaceutical companies charge consumers within the U.S. prescription drug prices that are comparable to other nations.

The second simple step is to follow the program of implementation as stated in the Democratic Plan. No new HMO and insurance bureaucracy is necessary. Let the Prescription Drug Benefit Plan be an extension of the Medicare program. Instead of offering a cruel and unusual joke, this Congress should unite behind a plan which relieves the very desperate needs of many of our senior citizens.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I rise today to protest the half-baked drug scheme that the GOP has jammed down Congress' throat. I find it a particular affront to our system of democracy that the Republicans blocked consideration of a plan that would easily cover all seniors.

I join hundreds of my colleagues in opposing a GOP scheme that would force America's seniors and future seniors to rely on private insurance companies or HMOs for prescription drug coverage. GOP supporters of the scheme received hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign contributions from pharmaceutical companies and HMOs.

America's seniors deserve affordable prescription drug coverage. They should not have to make the preposterous choice between prescription drugs and paying their rent.

The Democratic bill—on which GOP leaders refused to allow a vote—would have guaranteed voluntary prescription coverage for all Medicare beneficiaries. Medicare is available to the vast majority of people over 65. It would have a $25 monthly premium and a deductible of $100 per year. After that, beneficiaries would be responsible for just 20 percent of drug costs, with Medicare covering the remaining 80 percent. All costs would be covered after a beneficiary spent $2,000 out-of-pocket.

The Republican bill guarantees no specific benefit and subsidizes insurance companies in the hope they will create private insurance plans. Many HMOs and private insurance would not want to offer coverage under the plan. Those that did would be able to devise the coverage and set the premium.

We should not be playing a shell game with something as important as our seniors' health and well-being. The Republican bill leaves our seniors out in the cold.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support a fair and equal prescription drug plan.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, Adam Smith's economic theory of competition over monopoly has worked for our country's economy for nearly 200 years. While competition works for material items, it does not work for social services and human needs such as health care and prescription drugs. If we allow private companies to set their own premiums and encourage competition among the prescription drug plan providers, we will not cut costs, nor will we provide seniors with low premiums and co-pays.

As we have seen from health insurance providers, the most affordable insurance plans offer the least amount of coverage, while the most comprehensive plans are the most expensive. This leaves a senior, on a tight monthly budget, with the option of enrolling in a low-cost plan, or no plan at all. Therefore, by voting for this legislation, and allowing these companies to set their own premiums and deductibles, we are not guaranteeing anything to our seniors, and will be leaving the sickest ones, on the tightest budgets behind.

The Democratic plan is simply stated. There will be a $25 premium, $100 deductible, and 20 percent co-pay, and an out-of-pocket limit at $2,000. However, the Republican plan is extremely complicated. Different people will pay different co-pays depending on their total prescription drug costs. And let us not forget the gap in coverage for those who exceed $2,000 in total costs, but do not exceed their out-of-pocket cost of $3,800, all the while continuing to pay their high premiums of $35 per month.

In order to maintain all these different co-pays and to assure that competition is available, this bill would create a new agency called the Medicare Benefits Administration. This would only create more bureaucracy and red tape that is currently driving up the cost of health care in America. Almost 25 percent of the cost of health care is to cover the administrative overhead. We cannot add to this current horrible problem.

Not only is the Republican plan more confusing, but it will cost our seniors more. Let us look at two examples. The first is of individuals with $100 per month in prescription drug costs. Under the Republican plan they would pay $892 a year, but under the Democratic plan they would pay only $620 a year. How about those that have $300 per month in prescription drug costs? Under the Republican plan they would pay $2,892 a year, but under the Democratic plan they would only have to pay $1,100; that is a difference of $1,796 a year.

Mr. Speaker, let me close by saying that the issue of adding prescription drug coverage for Medicare recipients is long over due. But H.R. 4954 is not the answer.

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002.

This is truly a monumental day for millions of seniors in America. Congress is finally addressing our greatest generation's need for a prescription drug benefit under Medicare.

Prescription drug coverage is one of the most critical issues facing our Nation. This issue has moral, medical, and economic implications for every single American.

Under this bill, seniors will no longer have to become insolvent just to pay for the prescription drugs they need. We are rescuing seniors from the terrible dilemma of paying for food or life-saving medicines.

The problem is that when the majority of people need prescription drugs most, in the later years of life, the largest insurer of the elderly does not provide prescription drug coverage. As a result, many seniors go without the drugs they need, dilute their prescriptions or forego other basic necessities to purchase vital prescription drugs. This is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

H.R. 4954 not only provides affordable prescription drug coverage, but also strengthens the Medicare system to ensure that doctors are available to treat Medicare patients and hospitals can keep their doors open to Medicare beneficiaries.

Mr. Speaker, our seniors need and deserve a Medicare system that reflects the advances in medicine that have occurred in the past 37 years since Medicare began in 1965. They also deserve prescription drug coverage under Medicare.

The Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act provides a prescription drug benefit to all seniors and reforms irrational payments to doctors, hospitals, and nursing homes. The bill also strengthens the long-term financial condition of the Medicare program.

All Medicare beneficiaries are eligible for this prescription drug coverage, and seniors will save nearly 30 percent, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to pass this critical legislation because the seniors of America deserve a prescription drug benefit and a modernized Medicare system.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, tonight we are engaged in a partisan debate on what should be a bipartisan issue.

Reforming Medicare to ensure access to prescription drugs is one of the most important things we could do this year. Seniors have been promised this benefit by both parties during the past two Congresses.

Rather than engage in constructive debate, the Republican leadership has introduced a bill that does not get the job done under a rule for debate designed to prevent the consideration of any alternatives.

I intend to vote against the Republican bill because it fails to provide genuine, reliable drug coverage for seniors.

The Republican bill is confusing and unworkable. It requires seniors pay different amount in co-payments depending on how much they spend on prescription drugs overall. In fact, its benefits are likely so meager that only the sickest seniors would want to enroll—a recipe for bankruptcy of the system.

The Republican bill does not ensure discounts on all the drugs seniors need. Not only does it offer no guarantee that private plans will cover all the prescriptions seniors need, but because of high cost-sharing and premiums, it will cover only 20 percent of the average senior's drug costs in a year.

The Republican bill has a large gap in coverage. It offers seniors no assistance on drug costs between $2,000 and $3,700. That means that nearly half of all seniors will receive no coverage of their prescriptions for part of the year, even though they continue to pay premiums.

A Medicare prescription drug benefit must be affordable for both senior citizens and the federal government. A plan with high premiums and deductibles—or large gaps in coverage—won't help the seniors who need it most.

I believe that a Medicare drug benefit should achieve the following goals, and I am eager to work with my colleagues to achieve them:

(1) Help those who need it most first. We need to provide genuine and immediate assistance to low-income seniors and seniors who do not currently have drug coverage.

(2) Provide relief from the high and escalating cost of prescription drugs. Prescription drugs cost more in the United States than in any other nation in the world. Medicare should have the ability to negotiate lower prices for senior citizens as part of a drug benefit.

(3) Encourage new disease management techniques and innovation in the delivery of care. Medicare needs to catch up with the private sector in focusing on preventive care and the treatment of chronic conditions. Improving Medicare's coverage on these fronts will improve seniors' lives—and reduce their health care costs as well.

I hope we will be able to work in a bipartisan manner in the coming months to keep our promises to seniors and enact a fiscally responsible, meaningful law to include prescription drugs under Medicare.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this House stepped up to the plate in March and set aside three hundred and fifty billion dollars in our budget for prescription drug coverage. What was in the Democrat budget proposal for senior citizens? Well, nothing. They didn't bother to offer a budget.

But the absence of action did not prevent the other party from criticism and condemnation. It's always easy to yell and scream when you have nothing to offer.

The plan before the House today is one that will lower the cost of prescription drugs and help seniors get the life-saving medicine they need. It is practical, realistic, and supported by the President.

The Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002 is the right remedy for a national problem. In fact, the Department of Health and Human Services recently released a report that stated: "The House Republican plan would provide real relief for seniors and disabled Americans: those who now pay full retail prices would typically see the costs of each prescription cut by 60 to 85 percent, and their overall out-of-pocket drug costs would fall by as much as 70 percent—in exchange for a stable and affordable premium starting at thirty-four dollars per month."

The Democrat plan is a prescription for higher drug costs, enriching drug companies and fiscal disaster. It is an election year gimmick that will cost over eight hundred billion dollars over ten years and lead to higher drug prices and government price controls.

The Republican plan lowers drug costs, guarantees coverage and gives seniors choices. Seniors would be able to pick the plan of their choice—because one size does not fit all. Competition will drive down costs.

Mr. Speaker, no senior should have to decide between buying food and buying medicine. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation to give seniors the life-saving drugs they need and the peace of mind they deserve.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, the pattern denying opportunity for full debate and reasonable alternatives continues as we deal with prescription drug benefits for our Nation's seniors. The House will not be permitted to vote on the Democratic prescription alternative. Instead, we will only be allowed to consider the Republican bill, which does not provide a guaranteed drug benefit, instead offering only an HMO-style managed-drugs plan for some. Medicare was created in 1965 because most elderly people could not afford to buy expensive health insurance on the private market. Most still cannot, and we as a Congress should not in fairness impose this flawed plan on seniors.

Especially important to Oregon seniors are the regional inequities that already exist in Medicare, and that the Republican bill would allow to grow. Medicare already punishes Oregon for its size and efficiency with a Medicare reimbursement rate that is 66 percent of the national average rate per enrollee. As a result, Oregon seniors lose more than ¾ of a billion dollars every year. That represents approximately $1,660 per enrollee that ought to be going to medical care and services. We cannot tell how much we will lose under the bill before us today.

Their bill allows many different insurance companies to deal with seniors differently from city to city, and state to state. A senior in Oregon might pay significantly more than someone in Louisiana for the same, or even a reduced benefit. All seniors paid their taxes, and they all deserve an equal benefit. Rural areas and western states have had enough of this regional healthcare discrimination!

Choice is illusory in the Republican bill because the plans they propose do not exist and there is no assurance that insurance companies will ever offer these plans.

The Democratic bill, by comparison, is simple and fair. All beneficiaries will receive the same benefits, the same low $25 a month premiums, a lower $2,000 out-of-pocket limit, with any pharmacy they choose—wherever they live.

Furthermore, the Democratic alternative allows the Secretary to use collective purchasing powers on behalf of 40 million beneficiaries to negotiate lower prices, as he did getting Cipro, the antibiotic used for Anthrax, in the Fall of 2001. The Republican bill has no such provision. I support the plan that helps seniors, Medicare contractors, and is fair to the taxpayers.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, the Republican prescription drug bill is a sham, and the unfair rule that brings it to the floor exposed this partisan and shameful process for what it is—a political masquerade designed to convince Americans that we have answered the plea to add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare. Make no mistake, we fall far short of that goal today. I am appalled that the Republican leadership is not willing to allow the American people the decency of comparing the bill before us to a substitute that would provide a real drug benefit for Medicare beneficiaries. This limited debate available to us speaks volumes about the quality of the proposal before us today and its lack of a meaningful prescription drug benefit for the seniors.

The Republican sham prescription drug plan would not provide a guaranteed adequate prescription drug benefit for seniors. The coverage outlined in the bill isn't the kind of coverage most Americans think of when the need for prescription drug coverage for seniors. Coverage if 80/20 only through the first $1,000, when coverage drops to 50/50. And then there is a huge gap in coverage between $2,000, when the initial benefits run out, and $3,700, when catastrophic coverage finally begins. A beneficiary will receive zero benefits between $2,000 and $3,800 in spending, even though she will continue to pay the $35 monthly premium.

Perhaps even worse, the bill take the first step toward privatizing Medicare by contracting this new drug benefit out to private insurance plans. In so doing, premiums, deductibles, and copayments will vary across the country—so a senior who lives in Florida will likely pay a different premium than one of my constituents in Ohio. In addition, coverage under the bill we are considering today will be unstable because plans will be able to pull out from an area when they decide it doesn't fit their business plan. Where, then do our seniors turn for prescription drug coverage? The experience of Medicare+Choice illustrates this concern: there were Medicare+Choice HMOs in my district, but every single one left. Thankfully, those seniors who did switch to an M+C plan had traditional Medicare to fall back on. This won't be the case for prescription drugs if we pass the Republican drug plan. Instead, seniors will be left without any drug plan at all if and when the private insurers leave the area.

The Democrats' prescription drug plan would provide quality, guaranteed help for seniors. Unlike the Republican plan, the Democrats' proposal would create a prescription drug benefit that is part of Medicare, thus avoiding instability or variation in premiums that occur depending on where the beneficiary happens to live. In addition, the Democrats' plan provides much more help for seniors: there is no gap in coverage, catastrophic coverage would begin at $2,000 rather than 3,800, and the monthly premium would be $25. The unfair rule under which we debate this incredibly important issue means that Americans won't get to hear this comparison in detail or see how it fares in a vote. This is exactly what the Republicans want because they know their proposal can't compete with the Democrats' concrete plan, which has been endorsed by a litany of groups, including the Alliance of Retired Persons, the AARP, the AFL-CIO, AFSCME, The American Federation of Teachers, the Center for Medicare Advocacy, Families USA, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security, and Medicare, the National Council on the Aging, the National Partnership for Women and Families, and the National Senior Citizens Law Center.

Some of my colleagues will contend that the difference between our plan and theirs is the cost. They will say that the Democrats' are fiscally irresponsible and that our plan breaks the bank. On this point, I stand firm. It is a fact that this Congress has chosen to give huge tax breaks to the wealthy. The President told us we could do both: he said we could enact nearly $2 trillion in tax cuts as well as a prescription drug benefit for America's seniors. But Congress chose to pass tax cuts for the wealthy, and we have chosen not to enact a real prescription drug benefit for seniors. If the choice is between enacting a real prescription drug benefit and giving tax breaks to the wealthy and corporations, then I am proud to choose to stand on the side of America's seniors.

The rule also means that I won't be able to vote for a bill including many commendable provisions that have clear bipartisan support. This year, doctors were hit with a 5.4 percent cut in their Medicare reimbursement, hospitals are struggling with decreases in Medicaid disproportionate share hospital (DSH) funding and shortages in other payments, home health agencies are facing a 15 percent cut in reimbursement, and most Medicare providers are struggling with an increasingly difficult regulatory burden.

Doctors and hospitals in my district provide invaluable care to Medicare and Medicaid recipients, and I hope they know that I support fixing all of these problems. I hope they do not interpret my no vote on this bill as a vote against the compromises that have been reached to address these problems. I recognize that our failure to fix these could seriously threaten the quality of care seniors and the disabled receive, and I cannot overstate my determination to continue working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to enact these important solutions. We have, in some cases, already done this. For example, last year, the House passed a Medicare regulatory reform package that is now also included in this bill. And even though I support a permanent fix to the formula used to calculate the physician update in Medicare, I have worked with my colleagues to reach a temporary compromise that is included in this bill. I support these and other provisions that will go a long way to ensuring providers have the resources they need to continue to offer quality care for seniors. Therefore, it is with regret that I cannot support the bill that includes many of these solutions, and I will continue to work for their enactment this year.

I would like for all Americans to understand that the rule bringing this bill to the floor today undermines their ability to hear a full and open debate about developing a prescription drug plan for our seniors. It is shameful that politics is getting in the way of a healthy debate on the addition of a prescription drug benefit to Medicare. And it is also shameful that politics is interfering in the needed changes in Medicare reimbursements that will ensure beneficiaries continue to receive quality care. This is no way to develop thoughtful, reasonable, balanced legislation that will best serve the nation. Our seniors deserve much better.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this comprehensive package which will provide needed improvements to the Medicare system. Much of the debate on this legislation has centered on the need to add a prescription drug component to Medicare. I agree with this goal, and I support the responsible proposal put forth by the Ways and Means and Commerce Committees. The practice of medicine has significantly changed since the Medicare program was created in the 1960s, and the role of prescription drugs has dramatically increased. It is time we reform the Medicare program to reflect changing times.

However, I want to focus on other, very important parts of this legislation related to reimbursements for providers, especially those in rural America. This legislation provides a lifeline for rural America.

In my conversations with doctors, hospital administrators, and community leaders throughout Mississippi, a common concern is the decreasing ability to provide access to quality care in rural areas. The jobs of rural health care professionals are made harder by inequities in Medicare reimbursement rates between rural and urban areas. This bill goes a long way in correcting this problem by increasing the standardized amount for hospital reimbursement in small cities and rural areas to the level of urban areas in a two step process over the next 2 fiscal years. This is in addition to an increase in the market basket adjustment that all hospitals—urban, suburban, and rural—will receive.

The level of the standardized amount is especially important because this is the base with which Medicare starts when establishing reimbursement rates for specific services. Equalizing the standardized amount reduces the difference in payments caused by other parts of the Medicare reimbursement formula. But by putting urban and rural hospitals on the same footing at the beginning of the reimbursement formula, rural hospitals will benefit for years to come as changes are made to any part of the reimbursement system. This major improvement for rural hospitals will be fully implemented in just 2 years.

Other aspects of this bill provide additional benefits for home health agencies and critical access hospitals in rural America. The threat of a 15 percent reduction for home health services has been eased in recent years as Congress has continually delayed the planned reduction. This bill will eliminate the threat by permanently repealing the 15 percent cut, allowing home health agencies to adequately prepare their financial future. Critical access hospitals are increasingly an attractive option for rural communities that would otherwise be without health care service. By improving the rules and regulations for critical access hospitals, this legislation provides more flexibility in operations and in attracting physicians to medically underserved areas.

I am also pleased this legislation includes a three site hospice pilot project which is based upon H.R. 3270, a bill which I introduced in an effort to improve options for hospice care in rural areas. I believe the current 80 percent out-patient requirement makes it economically difficult to provide inpatient hospice care in rural areas because of smaller patient populations. It is my hope that this pilot project will validate the worth of our proposal and lead to an expansion of this specialized care to rural areas across the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill which will improve access to quality health care, be it for prescription drugs, or care in a hospital, home health agency, or hospice. I urge support for this legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, in my 18 months in Congress, through the many town hall meetings, letters, e-mails and phone calls, I consistently hear the same concern from people of eastern Connecticut—the rising cost of prescription drugs.

We all heard about seniors who have cut their medication in half because they can't afford to take their entire prescription or a senior who has to choose between buying food and buying their medication. We see seniors who are confronted with this choice at supermarkets everyday. We need to lower the cost of prescription drugs for our seniors now.

This concern is not perceived, but very real. The non-partisan Congressional Budget Office estimated that in 1999, nearly 90 percent of Medicare beneficiaries filled at least one prescription. In 2001, the average Medicare beneficiary pay $1,756 on prescription drugs annually, filling approximately 22 prescriptions in that year.

Next month, Medicare will turn 37 years old. The delivery of health care today is very different from the system of our parents and grandparents and very different from the way we cared for our seniors back in 1965.

I believe Medicare needs to be improved to better reflect these changes and strengthened for the future. If Medicare were being designed today, it would include a prescription drug benefit. Because of the remarkable advances made in prescription drugs, seniors are living longer, with a better quality of life. Unfortunately, the promise of prescription drugs is very hollow for those who cannot afford them.

Twenty-six states—including Connecticut—have already enacted some form of prescription drug assistance program and they are to be prescription drug assistance program and they are to be commended. I have long felt that the Federal Government should partner with states to help provide prescription drug relief to seniors, particularly to low-income seniors who have the greatest need.

Earlier this year, in an effort to provide immediate relief for Connecticut's seniors who were feeling the financial pinch over paying for their medicine, I introduced "Immediate Helping Hand" legislation, which provides more than $48 billion to states to give those who can't afford prescription drugs a "helping hand."

My bill would provide Connecticut's ConnPACE program with more than $91 million per year and expand prescription drug coverage to thousands of seniors. My plan was a solid first step—a bridge to provide seniors with immediate assistance until Congress passed a more comprehensive prescription drug benefit through Medicare.

But as of tonight, only 51 or so legislative days remain until Congress adjourns. I've come to realize with the short window of time left, its time to roll up our sleeves and work together on this issue. If Congress really wants to give seniors a prescription drug benefit, then we would need to do it now.

The Ways and Means and the Energy and Commerce Committees have introduced a plan to provide a prescription drug benefit under Medicare that is voluntary and affordable and guarantees prescription drug coverage for all seniors. Our plan gives seniors immediate relief from the rising costs of prescription medications by providing a 30 percent discount off the top of their overall drug bill. While seniors would pay a $35 monthly premium and a $250 annual deductible, our bill provides 80 percent coverage for drug bills between $251 and $1,000 of out of pocket drug expenses and 50 percent coverage for the next $1,000. Finally, our plan provides 100 percent catastrophic coverage for out of pocket drug expenses over $4,500 a year, ensuring that no senior will be forced into bankruptcy because of their prescription medication bill during a long-term, serious illness.

Our plan will lower the cost of prescription drugs now by providing a discount so that seniors can better afford their medications. Our plan will guarantee all senior citizens prescription drug coverage and provide additional assistance to low-income seniors. Our plan will improve Medicare with more choices and more savings and will strengthen Medicare for the future. Our plan is a reasonable solution that provides seniors with upfront savings on the high costs of drugs now as well as guarantee them a drug benefit under Medicare that doesn't sunset and can't be taken away.

Our seniors have worked hard to save for their "Golden Years." Yet the cost of prescription drugs is depleting their savings and jeopardizing their retirement security. Under our plan, seniors will be protected from run-away drug costs.

Our plan is also of particular importance to women. Women have a higher life expectancy than men; yet often have lower incomes in their retirement and face additional costs after their husbands pass on.

Speaker HASTERT asked me to participate in a special Prescription Drug Action Team and I thank him for this opportunity. In this role, I have tried to advance the cause of providing a prescription drug benefit under Medicare by meeting with the President and members of his cabinet; hold outreach meetings with groups such as senior citizen advocates and representatives of pharmacies and drug companies; attend listening sessions at local senior centers, such as Rose City Senior Center in Norwich and the Colchester Seniors Center, and pharmacies; and participate in bipartisan discussions with other Members of Congress to find lawmakers with the same goals who will work with me to produce a plan that will help provide real relief to seniors in Connecticut as well as the rest of the country.

Our seniors should not be forced to scrimp on food and shelter just to be able to afford their medicine. Older Americans deserve more savings and more choice when they fill their prescriptions, and I hope Democrats and Republicans will join together now to see that they receive meaningful prescription drug coverage.

To delay is to deny. Let's get a prescription drug benefit signed into law now.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak out against H.R. 4954, what should have been called the Republican Insurance Protection Act.

When medical students become doctors, they take an oath written by Hippocrates, a great Greek philosopher and naturalist, in the year 400 BC. The underlying spirit of the Hippocratic Oath, is that when someone needs your help, when they trust you to do the right thing to improve their health, the number one priority is to do no harm.

As we design a system to get the much-needed medications to our Nation's seniors and disabled citizens on Medicare, we must keep the spirit of the Hippocratic oath in mind. These folks need our help, we have promised them that we would help them get the health care they need, and they trust us to keep that promise.

The Republican plan to privatize and compromise Medicare would be a step in the wrong direction. It is a gift to insurance companies and the pharmaceuticals industry, but does nothing for most of our seniors. If it passes, Hippocrates will probably be turning over in his grave.

Let's look at some numbers:

Let's consider one senior, she could be your mother or grandmother. She could be on a fixed income, and her doctor has decided she needs $500 per month in prescription medications to live comfortably. Not only is she carrying a huge financial burden, but she is sick, and from talking to our constituents at home, we all know the frustration and even depression that can accompany long-term illness.

She is a member of the greatest generation, as they have been called, that generation that worked hard to give us the unprecedented prosperity and security we all have enjoyed over the past decades, and now she needs our help.

And what does the Insurance Protection Act offer her?

As the year starts, so do her bills. Her out of pocket costs rise rapidly throughout the year—$1,000, $2,000, $3,000, about $4,000, because even if she hits the catastrophic limit, she is still paying premiums that add to her burden.

And what about her benefits? They are almost non-existent for most of the year. She gets a little help at first, but it falls off rapidly. Then, for a big chunk of the year—she gets nothing, as she falls into the Republican gap.

Finally, when she hits catastrophe, her bills get covered. But, most seniors don't ever get there—they just end up stuck in the Republican gap.

These numbers are the best we could calculate last week with the vague plan that we had been presented with. These numbers look bad, but they may be even worse. H.R. 4954 does not guarantee even this low level of benefit. It only offers subsidies to private insurance companies in hopes that they might take care of our seniors even though we don't. Associations of insurance companies have already gone on record stating they probably will not offer the drug-only plans necessary for the Republican plan to function.

The Republican plan puts this sick senior on a roller coaster. Her premiums are not guaranteed. Her deductible is high. She is not assured that she will be able to buy the drugs her doctor prescribes at the pharmacy she trusts. She gets nothing for a big part of the year, even though she keeps paying her premiums.

She gets all of the paperwork and premiums of a big government program—with none of the benefits. This is a gimmick. It is a step in the wrong direction, and it violates the principle of do no harm.

We do not have to take this step backward because, there is a choice. The Democratic alternative provides a continuous stream of aid to all of those who need it. It offers low premiums and guaranteed benefits. Yes it costs more, but it could actually be a bargain. Unlike the Republican plan which does nothing for the vast majority of seniors, the Democratic plan helps all seniors. By harnessing the bargaining power of those 40 million seniors, the Democratic plan will drive down the cost of prescription drugs. Also, new medications, especially preventive medications can save us money in the long run. By keeping people out of hospitals and emergency rooms and off of the surgeon's table, a good prescription drug bill could actually start saving us money.

But most importantly, it is what our seniors deserve. I urge my colleagues to wait for a better alternative, and vote "no" today on H.R. 4539, the Insurance Protection Plan.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the bill before us and in strong support of the Democratic alternative, of which I am an original cosponsor.

The Republicans know that the American people demand prescription drug coverage for seniors. But instead of passing a bill to help our seniors, they've chosen to give $350 billion to insurance companies, trusting them to do what's right for seniors.

This bill is a cruel joke. Republicans broke their word—they promised to help seniors and the disabled with a real Medicare prescription drug benefit, and instead passed a pathetic gimmick that will leave seniors holding the bag. This bill isn't a Medicare benefit plan for seniors, it's a Republican benefit plan for corporations.

I am an original cosponsor of an alternative bill that would provide real coverage for our seniors through Medicare. The Democratic plan fulfills our responsibility to provide for those who made this country what it is today. No senior should be forced into poverty to pay for life-saving drugs—and no senior living in poverty should be denied necessary medications.

Our plan would not only provide a meaningful prescription drug benefit, it would allow seniors and individuals with disabilities to go on making the choices that matter. The Republican bill would take choices away, offering coverage through private plans that may not allow seniors to choose their pharmacy, or their doctor. The only choice left for many seniors would be between purchasing food and purchasing drugs.

The Democratic plan is so good, in fact, that Republicans would not even let it come to a vote. They did not want to admit that their trillion dollar tax cuts for the super-rich don't leave enough money for a real benefit for seniors. But the American people are not so easily fooled. They know that Republicans put the interests of the rich ahead of the interests of seniors.

Our plan would help all Americans. It would bring down the skyrocketing price of prescription drugs, so that giant pharmaceutical companies can't inflate their profits at public expense. Medicare contractors would obtain guaranteed reductions in price, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services would be able to fight back against price gouging, using the collective bargaining power of Medicare's 40-million beneficiaries. It would stop patent abuses, bringing down drug prices for all Americans. The Secretary would also be able to encourage the use of generic drugs, set lower coinsurance for preferred drugs, enhance disease management, and strengthen beneficiary and provider education. The Republican plan would do nothing to reduce the price of prescription drugs. Tax dollars would be used to pay the same inflated prices that seniors pay today.

I urge my colleagues to make good on their promises, to defeat H.R. 4954, and to pass meaningful prescription drug coverage in Medicare for seniors and the disabled.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the Republican prescription drug bill. For years, our seniors have been begging for help to obtain affordable prescription drugs. The bill before us today gives relief to the large drug companies, not our vulnerable seniors.

It forces Medicare patients into multiple private drug plans, undercuts seniors' collective purchasing power, and enables the drug industry to maintain its unjustifiably high prices.

By contrast, the Democratic plan would provide voluntary prescription drug coverage for all Medicare beneficiaries. The plan curbs drug costs by allowing the Secretary to use the collective bargaining power of Medicare's 40 million beneficiaries to negotiate lower drug prices.

But we will not have the opportunity to vote on this sensible plan that is supported by the majority of Americans because the Republican leadership is afraid it would pass.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the sham Republican proposal and say no to the big drug companies. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WEXLER. Mr. Speaker, prescription drug coverage has long been a top priority for a majority of Americans, and as a result, both George Bush and Al Gore pledged during the 2000 Presidential campaign to provide seniors with a comprehensive prescription drug plan and finally put an end to the prescription drug crisis in America. The House Republican leadership avoided this issue for as long as they could, but the day of reckoning arrived, and when it was time for both sides to ante up, the Republicans offered nothing but a sham. Now here we are, preparing to vote on what the Republicans say is a plan that will help seniors pay for prescription drugs. But before we do, I want all my colleagues to know what is really on the table.

Quite simply, the Republican prescription drug plan is a disgrace; it is nothing more than a half-hearted attempt to deliver on an empty promise and provide themselves with election year cover. This will not bring the rising costs of prescription drugs down, it has significant gaps in coverage, and where it does provide coverage, it relies completely on unreliable HMOs and insurance companies to provide it. The Republican plan will get us nowhere and will leave too many seniors with nothing at all. As we look at the Republican proposal, it is clear that while the needs of so many are being neglected, the wants of an influential few are being met.

The Democratic prescription drug bill we have offered will provide real, meaningful, affordable, prescription drug coverage under Medicare. It will allocate $800 billion to ensure that all seniors can afford coverage. There will be no gaps in coverage, and nobody will be forced to join an HMO. But regrettably, we can't even debate this bill today. While that is a shame in and of itself, the real tragedy is that we must choose between a horrible bill or no bill at all. But maybe that is what Republicans—who have been raking in campaign contributions from the insurance industry and the pharmaceutical companies who are the only true beneficiaries of the Republican bill—wanted all along.

The bill that I am sponsoring will be affordable for all seniors, will cover any prescription regardless of the brand, and not just cover those on the insurance companies' formularies. Our prescription drug plan will provide seniors substantial savings by using the government's bargaining power to obtain the best prices for Medicare, as currently done for Medicaid and the Veterans Administration. The Republican plan, in contrast, relies on the insurance industry and HMOs to provide the already scant coverage that it offers. The Republicans have disguised their shallow attempt to pay back the pharmaceutical companies and insurance industry for millions in campaign contributions under the title of Medicare Modernization. The real name for this bill should be the Insurance and Pharmaceutical Industry Payback Act.

The criticism that has been offered by Republicans regarding the Democratic bill is that it is unrealistic. That is their argument, simply because they know that the Democratic bill interferes with their $1.3 trillion tax cut. And to add insult to injury, Republicans continue to push for additional billions in tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans, which is more than enough to pay for the more generous Democratic plan. It is shameful that while Republicans pander to the narrow interests they serve, seniors continue to wait for a real solution to the prescription drug crisis.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, it is simply unacceptable that 13 million seniors do not have prescription drug coverage. Seniors need prescription drug coverage and they need it now.

The legislation before us today provides a real, timely drug benefit while helping ensure the future solvency of the Medicare program. Although much more reform is necessary, the Medicare modernization provisions contained in the bill are a significant step forward in providing long overdue Medicare improvements. If the Medicare system is to remain viable in the future, it is essential that we bring the Medicare program in line with 21st century healthcare advances and expectations.

I support the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002 because it creates a prescription drug benefit in Medicare that is affordable, available, and voluntary. It gives people the power to choose the plan that best fits their needs, including protection against high out-of-pocket drug costs that threaten their health and financial security.

This bill guarantees a choice of at least two drug plans in every area of the country, without endangering existing drug coverage that seniors might already have through a former employer. We avoid giving the Federal Government too heavy a hand in controlling drug benefits, ensuring that seniors will not be denied the right to select the coverage that best fits their needs.

Furthermore, the bill will bring the increased competition among health plans that is necessary to reduce drug prices. According to the Department of Health and Human Services, this plan is the only proposal before Congress that would lower drug prices and provide an immediate drug discount of up to 15 percent.

Mr. Speaker, seniors must not have to choose between their medicine and other basics like food and housing. We have a chance to strengthen the Medicare program to guarantee that our children and their children have access to quality health services and prescription drugs when they become eligible for Medicare. Let us take this monumental step and improve Medicare for the future.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 4954 and in support of the Democratic substitute. It is imperative that we provide senior citizens with quality, affordable, and reliable health care. H.R. 4954 does not accomplish these important goals.

I am committed to strengthening and improving Medicare. As the nationwide health insurance program for the elderly, Medicare has provided important protections for millions of Americans over its 37-year history. However, the program continues to face increasing problems. Like so many Americans, I am concerned that the program's structure has failed to keep pace with the changes in the health care system as a whole. When Medicare was created, prescription drug use was limited, with most beneficiaries being treated in hospitals. Today, advances in pharmaceutical research allow doctors to treat seniors on an outpatient basis. Unfortunately, Medicare has not kept up with this change.

As a result, Congress has been actively working to craft a prescription drug benefit for Medicare that is affordable and reliable. Yet, under the Republican bill, the government would pay subsidies to insurance companies to induce them to offer drug coverage. These "drug only" insurance plans do not currently exist, and may never exist, and therefore do not offer a guaranteed benefit to our seniors. Beneficiaries would be forced to choose between HMOs and risky private drug-only insurance plans. Further, this legislation merely provides suggestions for standard coverage; private insurers have the freedom to alter premiums which can be much higher, varying from county to county, and year to year. Seniors would not know what to expect from their drug benefit from year to year or how much it would cost.

In addition, H.R. 4954 provides inadequate coverage to Medicare beneficiaries. It would cover less than a quarter of beneficiaries' estimated drug costs over the next 10 years. Nearly half of all seniors spend over $2,000 annually. This bill would not pay for drug costs between $2,000 and $3,700. Further, this legislation would do nothing to assist low-income beneficiaries. Low-income beneficiaries may have to pay $2 to $5 co-pays and 100 percent of the costs in the coverage gap.

In contrast, the Democratic substitute, had we been able to offer it, offers seniors a real Medicare prescription drug benefit for with relief from the high cost of prescription drug prices. This legislation would lower the costs of drugs for all seniors, would offer an affordable, guaranteed Medicare drug benefit, would ensure seniors coverage of the drugs their doctors prescribe, and would not force seniors into HMOs or private insurance. Beneficiaries would pay a $25 premium per month, a $100 deductible per year, and would receive full coverage after paying $2,000 in out of pocket expenses. In addition, this substitute would help low-income beneficiaries with premium and co-insurance payments. Finally, it would guarantee Medicare beneficiaries the choices that matter: choice of prescription drug, choice of pharmacy, and choice of doctor and hospital.

I support the provider payment adjustments made to hospitals, physicians, and rural communities represented in both H.R. 4954 and the Democratic substitute; however, I cannot in good faith support H.R. 4954 with its unacceptable prescription drug plan.

Mr. Speaker, I am committed to providing a comprehensive benefit that is affordable and dependable for all beneficiaries with no gaps or gimmicks in its coverage. What Congress offers to senior citizens and individuals with disabilities should be no less generous than what Members of Congress and other Federal employees receive. For these reasons, I oppose H.R. 4954. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. BONILLA. Mr. Speaker, while I support this bill because it provides meaningful prescription drug coverage for America's seniors and implements measures needed to modernize the Medicare system, I rise out of concern for the effects of this bill on pharmacy services. Pharmacists are on the front lines of health care for millions of Americans. Seniors count on their pharmacist for quality medications and medication therapy services. Coverage of prescription drugs should go hand-in-hand with access to quality pharmacy services.

This bill would inhibit the ability of America's seniors to select the pharmacy that best meets their needs. In many of the smaller towns in my district, seniors have established long-standing relationships of trust with their community pharmacists. This bill would force many of these seniors to turn elsewhere for prescription drug services.

Furthermore, this bill allows Pharmacy Benefit Managers to establish restrictive pharmacy networks, preferred formularies, mail order services and inadequate reimbursement rates, severely undermining the future viability of community pharmacies. Prescription drug plan sponsors, not pharmacists or doctors, would determine the selection of medications to be included on formularies. Cost would supercede the medication that is in the best interest of the patient, and community pharmacies would be left struggling to stay in business.

This bill also compromises seniors' access to medication-therapy services. Pharmacists play an important role in reducing medication-related problems. They routinely resolve complex drug interaction problems for seniors who take multiple medications. These problems cost billions of dollars annually and kill hundreds-of-thousands of persons. Medication-therapy services decrease long-term health care costs while increasing safety.

As a conservative, I recognize the need to be fiscally responsible, however we should not allow our efforts to rein in the high cost of prescription drugs to jeopardize the health of our seniors. Taken together, the provisions of this legislation would impose economic hardships that would severely damage pharmacy infrastructure and compromise the health of America's precious seniors.

Thousands of pharmacists have diligently served America's seniors with dedication and excellence. We should not inhibit their ability to continue providing the drugs and services our seniors desperately need.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, while there is little debate about the need to update and modernize the Medicare system to allow seniors to use Medicare funds for prescription drugs, there is much debate about the proper means to achieve this end. However, much of that debate is phony, since neither H.R. 4954 or the alternative allow seniors the ability to control their own health care. Instead both plans give a large bureaucracy the power to determine what prescription drugs senior citizens can receive. The only difference is that alternative puts seniors under the control of the federal bureaucracy, while H.R. 4954 gives this power to "private" health maintenance organizations and insurance companies.

I am pleased that the drafters of H.R. 4954 incorporate regulatory relief legislation, which I have supported in the past, into the bill. This will help relieve some of the tremendous regulatory burden imposed on health care providers by the Federal Government. I am also pleased that H.R. 4954 contains several good provisions addressing the Congressionally-created crisis in rural health and attempting to ensure that physicians are fairly reimbursed by the Medicare system.

However, Mr. Speaker, at the heart of this legislation is a fatally flawed plan that will fail to provide seniors access to the pharmaceuticals of their choice. H.R. 4954 requires seniors to enroll in a prescription benefit management company (PBM), which is the equivalent of an HMO. Under this plan, the PBM will have the authority to determine which pharmaceuticals are available to seniors. Thus, in order to get any help with their prescription drug costs, seniors have to relinquish their ability to choose the type of prescriptions that meet their own individual needs! The inevitable result of this process will be rationing, as PBM bureaucrats attempt to control costs by reducing the reimbursements paid to pharmacists to below-market levels (thus causing pharmacists to refuse to participate in PBM plans), and restricting the type of pharmacies seniors may use in the name of "cost effectiveness." PBM bureaucrats may even go so far as to forbid seniors from using their own money to purchase Medicare-covered pharmaceuticals. I remind my colleagues that today the federal government prohibits seniors from using their own money to obtain health care services which differ from those "approved" of by the Medicare bureaucracy!

Since H.R. 4954 extends federal subsidies (and federal regulations) to private insurers, the effects of this program will be felt even by those seniors with private insurance. Thus, H.R. 4954 will in actuality reduce the access of many seniors to the prescription drugs of their choice!

I must express my disappointment that this legislation does nothing to reform the government policies responsible for the skyrocketing costs of prescription drugs. Congress should help all Americans by reforming federal patent laws and FDA policies which provide certain large pharmaceutical companies a government-granted monopoly over pharmaceutical products. Perhaps the most important thing Congress could do to reduce pharmaceutical policies is liberalize the regulations surrounding the reimportation of FDA-approved pharmaceuticals.

As a representative of an area near the Texas-Mexican border, I often hear from angry constituents who cannot purchase inexpensive quality imported pharmaceuticals in their local drug store. Some of these constituents regularly travel to Mexico on their own to purchase pharmaceuticals. It is an outrage that my constituents are being denied the opportunity to benefit from a true free market in pharmaceuticals by their own government.

The alternative suffers from the same flaws, and will have the same (if not worse) negative consequences for seniors as will H.R. 4954. The only difference between the two is that under the alternative, seniors will be denied the choice for pharmaceuticals by bureaucrats at the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) rather than by a federally subsidized PMB bureaucrat.

Mr. Speaker, our seniors deserve better than a "choice" between whether a private-or-public sector bureaucrat will control their health care. Meaningful prescription drug legislation should be based on the principles of maximum choice and flexibility for senior citizens. For example, my H.R. 2268 provides seniors the ability to use Medicare dollars to cover the costs of prescription drugs in a manner that increases seniors' control over their own health care.

H.R. 2268 removes the numerical limitations and sunset provisions in the Medicare Medical Savings Accounts (MSA) program. Medicare MSAs consist of a special saving account containing Medicare funds for seniors to use for their routine medical expenses, including prescription drug costs. Unlike the plans contained in H.R. 4504, and the Democratic alternative, Medicare MSAs allow seniors to use Medicare funds to obtain the prescription drugs that fit their unique needs. Medicare MSAs also allow seniors to use Medicare funds for other services not available under traditional Medicare, such as mammograms.

Medicare MSAs will also ensure senior access to a wide variety of health care services by minimizing the role of the federal bureaucracy. As many of my colleagues know, an increasing number of health care providers have withdrawn from the Medicare program because of the paperwork burden and constant interference with their practice by bureaucrats from the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services. The MSA program frees seniors and providers from this burden, thus making it more likely that quality providers will remain in the Medicare program!

Mr. Speaker, seniors should not be treated like children by the federal government and told what health care services they can and cannot have. We in Congress have a duty to preserve and protect the Medicare trust fund. We must keep the promise to America's seniors and working Americans, whose taxes finance Medicare, that they will have quality health care in their golden years. However, we also have a duty to make sure that seniors can get the health care that suits their needs, instead of being forced into a cookie cutter program designed by Washington, DC-based bureaucrats! Medicare MSAs are a good first step toward allowing seniors the freedom to control their own health care.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, both H.R. 4954 and the alternative force seniors to cede control over what prescription medicines they may receive. The only difference between them is that H.R. 4954 gives federally funded HMO bureaucrats control over seniors prescription drugs, while the alternative gives government functionaries the power to tell seniors what prescription drug they can (and can't) have. Congress can, and must, do better for our Nation's seniors, by rejecting this command-and-control approach. Instead, Congress should give seniors the ability to use Medicare funds to pay for the prescription drugs of their choice by passing my legislation giving all seniors access to Medicare-Medicaid Savings Accounts.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Republican Party's sham prescription drug benefit proposal. Prescription drugs, especially for our elderly population, are not a luxury but a matter of life or death. Prescription drug costs in our country are rising nearly 20 percent each year, forcing more and more of our country's parents and grandparents to choose between their medication and other necessities of life such as food. Our Nation's seniors worked hard to make this country strong, many fighting in far-off places to keep us free. They deserve to have health care security.

Unfortunately, the Republican prescription drug plan falls short in providing this security to our seniors. First, the Republican plan covers less than a quarter of the costs seniors will pay for their medication over the next 10 years. Second, under the Republican plan, the premiums and the deductible are so high that most seniors won't be able to afford the plan and as a result will receive no benefits at all. Finally, the Republicans have no universal prescription drug plan. Instead, they leave it to individual insurance companies to develop their own plans. This means seniors will be left on their own to do the research on each plan that will vary in price, benefits, and availability across the country.

This complicated, time-consuming, and expensive process is unfair and unnecessary, and it represents just another step in the Republican Party's effort to privatize Medicare. That is why Democrats have offered a simple, affordable prescription drug plan with a standard benefit and a low deductible. Through the use of collective buying power, the Democratic prescription drug plan actually lowers drug prices for all of Medicare's 40 million beneficiaries. Unfortunately, Republicans did not allow this alternative plan to be presented to the House for a vote. The Republican bill before us is a sham that does little to help our Nation's seniors.

The House must defeat the Republican bill and take the necessary steps to pass the Democratic prescription drug bill that will give all America's seniors the benefits they need and the health care security they deserve.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it matters who is in charge. This Republican leadership must think the American people are stupid. Last week they raised $30 million dollars in a fund raiser with the drug companies, and this week we have a prescription drug bill on the floor. Now who do you think they wrote this bill for: The seniors they've been promising relief to for 2 years, or the big drug companies that will be funding their elections this fall?

While on a trip back home to Jacksonville in March, I went to the drug store for my grandmother to pick up just one of her prescriptions. I was expecting maybe a $15 co-payment because I knew her insurance plan had drug coverage. The bill was $91 dollars. She had a limit on her coverage, and it had run out. We were 3 months into the year, and she no longer has a drug plan.

My grandmother, and all grandmothers deserve better than this. If the Republicans can take a break from their million dollar drug company fund raisers and constant tax cut bills for their country club friends, maybe we can work on a compromise that will provide our seniors with the relief we have been promising them. My Republican colleagues talk the talk, but they don't walk the walk. The Republican leadership has come up with a privatized drug plan that has been rejected by both the insurance industry and the drug stores as unworkable, and fails to truly help seniors.

This is one more perfect example of why it matters who is in charge.

Mrs. BONO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support comprehensive health care improvements for our country. The Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002 offers a real and immediate benefit to our seniors, while also offering substantive improvements to a Medicare system that will collapse in on itself without reforms.

Currently the seniors in my district, which represent over one in five of all individuals in California's 44th District, are without prescription drug coverage that is essential to their quality of health. With this legislation, these individuals will receive an affordable option that will become a permanent facet of Medicare for generations to come.

I have had the honor of serving on the Speaker's Prescription Drug Action team, and we have worked hard to address both prescription drug coverage and improvements to the Medicare system. These include helping our doctors continue to better serve Medicare beneficiaries and helping our hospitals to keep their doors open to those who can't afford to meet even basic health care needs. In particular, the Medicaid Disproportionate Share Hospital monies included in this bill are a serious start to helping our public hospitals, including two in my district.

There is still work to be done in properly funding these hospitals that offer such essential services, but this comprehensive legislation is taking a step in the right direction.

One of my constituents recently wrote to me and spoke of the urgency with which we need to provide our seniors with affordable prescription drug coverage. Her message is echoed by thousands of others, and she is correct that we can no longer ignore the urgent need to improve our health care system.

It is urgent because our seniors cannot continue to keep up with rising prescription drug costs. It is urgent because our doctors and hospitals must have the tools to continue to offer quality care. And it is urgent because we can no longer afford to make patchwork fixes to a program that has not received needed improvements since its inception in 1965. It is for these reasons that I rise today in support of The Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, providing affordable Medicare prescription drug coverage for our Nation's seniors is one of the most pressing issues facing our country today. Even though the elderly use the most prescriptions, more than 75 percent of seniors on Medicare lack reliable drug coverage. It is time to modernize Medicare to reflect our current health care delivery system. The use of prescription medications is as important today as the use of hospital beds was in 1965 when Medicare was created.

I have heard from a number of seniors in western Wisconsin regarding the problems they have paying for prescription drugs. One woman from Deer Park, Wisconsin, a small town in my district, wrote to me and said:

My medication is $135.00 per month. Fortunately my husband is not on any medication. If we both were not working part-time, I guess that we would have to make a choice between food and medication—does one eat to survive or take the medication for a "long and happy life"?

What is to happen to this couple if the husband falls ill and has high drug costs too?

Seniors without prescription drug coverage often pay the highest prices for their medication. Pharmaceutical companies negotiate prices with their most favored customers, such as HMOs, but seniors without drug coverage do not benefit from these negotiations. Not only do my seniors face price discrimination in their hometowns, but also they can go to Canada and get the same medicine for a substantially cheaper price. On average my constituents would pay about 80 percent less for their drugs in Canada than they do at home in western Wisconsin. That is wrong.

The cost of prescription medicines should not place financial on seniors that would force them to choose between buying drugs and buying food. We need to make prescription medicines affordable and accessible to all of our seniors.

Unfortunately, today's debate is a sham. We will not have the opportunity to discuss this issue in a fair and open process. The majority decided to railroad the debate and silence the minority by not allowing an alternative to be debated and voted upon. Our nation's seniors deserve better. They deserve an open process, but the Republican leadership has failed to deliver this.

The leadership has also failed seniors with their prescription drug proposal. The Republican plan is doomed to fail because the plan relies on health insurance companies to offer drug only policies which they have said they won't offer. If insurance companies won't offer these policies, how will seniors actually obtain prescription drug coverage under the leadership plan?

Every insurance company with whom I have spoken has said that they will not offer a drug-only insurance policy. In fact, during our last debate on this issue, the Health Insurance Association of America, which consists of nearly 300 insurance companies, released a statement claiming, "These 'drug only' policies represent an empty promise to America's seniors. They are not workable or realistic."

Why should the insurance companies provide these drug only policies? They are in the business of insuring risk and there is no risk associated with a drug only policy. This single benefit policy will result in adverse risk selection—only people with predictably high prescription medicine costs will purchase the plan. This will increase the cost to the insurance companies who in turn will pass the costs on to the beneficiaries through higher premiums.

In addition, providing a drug benefit through private plans could be problematic, specifically for folks living in rural and small communities. There are no requirements as to what has to be covered and the coverage may vary from area to area depending on the plan. Wisconsin may end up on the short end of the stick like we have in the past under Medicare. Another problem is the huge hole in coverage. Once a senior hits $2,000 in drug costs there is no coverage until they spend $3,700 in out-of-pocket expenses. Nearly half of all seniors have drug expenditures over $2,000 and will receive no drug coverage for part of the year. Further, there is no help for low-income seniors to cover their drug costs over $2,000 and before they hit the stop-loss.

We must provide a real solution to the problem of prescription drug coverage for our seniors. The Republican plan falls woefully short. The Democratic proposal, however, heads in the right direction and builds on the current Medicare program. The benefit would include: a $25/month premium; a $100 annual deductible; 20 percent cost-sharing for drug costs; and $2,000 out-of-pocket annual stop-loss. Low-income individuals up to 150 percent of poverty will pay no premium or cost-sharing. The Democratic plan would guarantee a minimum benefit and ensure that those who live in Wisconsin would receive the same benefit as those who live in California or Florida.

This plan is expensive but it would work because of its simplicity. The question about its affordability depends on whether the American people want a meaningful prescription drug program or if they would rather see large tax cuts in the future for the wealthiest Americans.

It is unfortunate that the Republican leadership has squandered an excellent opportunity to try and solve the problem of prescription drug coverage in a bipartisan fashion. Instead they have steam-rolled ahead and presented our Nation's seniors with an unworkable solution to a grave problem. I urge my colleagues to reject this flawed proposal.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member will vote for H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002. There are elements in this Medicare reform legislation which improve the access of health care services in rural areas.

For example, not only does this legislation continue an effort to address some of this Member's concerns regarding the significant difference in reimbursement levels for urban and rural health care providers, it would also provide a 3-year fix for the Medicare physician payment formula, resulting in a 6 percent increase in Medicare payments over the next 3 years rather than the 14.2 percent projected cut under current law.

For some time now, this Member has been aggressively pursuing an issue related to the formula used in the Medicare program to reimburse physicians and other health care providers for beneficiaries' medical care. The problem is that it does not accurately measure the cost of providing such services. The program reimburses physicians and other health care providers in a manner that favors urban providers over rural providers. Instead, Medicare payment formulas should more accurately compensate physicians and providers who deliver high-quality, cost-effective services to Medicare beneficiaries in all areas of the country.

Accordingly, this Member is pleased that the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002 contains a compromise agreement that would establish a floor of 9.985 for the physician work adjuster in 2004 (only), thereby raising all localities with a work adjuster below 9.985 to that level. This change would be dependent upon the outcome of a General Accounting Office (GAO) study and secretarial discretion. The Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services would determine, after taking into account the GAO report, if there is "a sound economic rationale for the implementation" of such a change. If so, the new floor would go into effect. The change would thereby allow 34 Medicare localities across the country, including this Member's home state of Nebraska, to receive a higher reimbursement rate without harming other localities. This language is a modified version of this Member's legislation, the Rural Equity Payment Index Reform Act (H.R. 3569), which is currently co-sponsored on a bipartisan basis by 60 Members of the House. The language included in the House Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act is also a result of efforts by the distinguished gentlelady from New Mexico [Mrs. WILSON], and pushed hard to ensure such language was and the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARETT], who pursued this issue in the House Energy and Commerce Committee. This Member joined his colleagues, especially the gentlelady from New Mexico [Mrs. WILSON], and pushed hard to ensure such language was included in the final Medicare bill brought to the House Floor for consideration today.

Establishing a floor of 9.985 to the Medicare physician work adjuster would translate into approximately a $4 million annual increase in Medicare payments to Nebraska physicians and skilled health care professionals in 2004. This is an important first step toward achieving much needed Medicare reform.

This Member is also pleased that the bill would avert a series of projected cuts of nearly 15 percent in Medicare payments. On November 1, 2001, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) announces that it would lower payment rates for 2002 under the Medicare Physician Fee Schedule. Estimates indicate that this change would result in a $2.0 billion reduction in payments for 2002.

Reductions of this magnitude were completely unexpected and stemmed from two major factors: the downturn of the economy and the related reduction in the Gross Domestic Product that is used to establish the sustainable growth rate for physician spending, and an error on the part of the CMS in collecting physician payment information. This legislation addresses this serious health care issue.

The Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002 also takes an important step forward in addressing the unintended consequences of the Balanced Budget Act, as well as improving payments for hospitals, particularly rural hospitals. For example, the bill provides increased payment rates for hospitals in rural areas or in metropolitan areas with a population of less than one million.

Under current law, Medicare pays for inpatient services in acute care hospitals in large urban areas using a standardized payment amount that is 1.6 percent larger than the standardized amount used to reimburse hospitals in rural areas and smaller urban areas. This legislation, over a 2-year period, would increase the standardized amount for hospitals in rural and small urban areas to the standardized amount paid to hospitals in large urban areas. According to the Nebraska Hospital Association, for example, this could mean an additional $6 million annually for hospitals in Nebraska.

Additionally, the bill increases payments to non-teaching rural and urban hospitals in states whose aggregate inpatient operating medical margins are negative for rural hospitals or less than three percent for urban hospitals. The Nebraska Hospital Association estimates that this could result in an additional $8 million annually for Nebraska's hospitals.

This Member will record two concerns about the initiation of any Medicare prescription drug plan and that is, first, the rather extraordinary cost of this new entitlement program which would have to be paid for employers, employees, and the self-employed, recognizing the high probability that these costs will be underestimated in this or any alternative proposals put before the Congress. That is the track record for all past Medicare and Medicaid initiatives.

However, the major concern this Member has is the near certainty that the cost of prescription drugs for Americans not eligible for the proposed Medicare prescription drug benefits will increase because of the Medicare prescription drug coverage offered to eligible senior citizens under this or other proposals. When, for example, Medicaid costs for nursing home care soared, cost restraints were imposed and the operators cost-shifted to the private-pay and insurance-pay residents. The same cost-shifting occurred when cost-restraints had to be established on Medicare costs for hospitalization and health professional fees. It is certain that some cost-shifting will occur in short order when restraints inevitably will be placed on Medicare prescription drug costs. The result will surely be that pharmaceutical costs will be cost-shifted by the drug industry to everyone else in America.

This legislation, in this crucial deficiency, does nothing to restrain pharmaceutical costs and domestic cost-shifting. However, after extensive consultation, House leadership has promised a vote to those of us demanding some method to directly keep Medicare prescription drug benefits of eligible senior citizens from causing prescription drug costs to resultantly increase for other Americans.

One such vote could be on an implementable drug re-importation program of FDA approved drugs for individual, wholesale, or retail uses. Turn loose the American entrepreneurial proclivities on this approach, and it will moderate the outrageously unacceptable level of international cost-shifting that now falls onto the backs of American consumers. Most other developed countries have imposed cost constraints on the prescription drug costs borne by their consumers; therefore, American and foreign-owned pharmaceutical firms are charging what the market and tolerance of the American people will bear. This legislation thus far does not address this huge problem—ultimately providing Medicare drug benefits to eligible senior citizens will make the cost of prescription drugs more expensive for most Americans directly and indirectly through Medicare deductions from their paychecks and through its effects on their employer's bottom line.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, on balance, this Member supports H.R. 4954 because of the progress made in providing better access to quality health care in non-metropolitan areas through the Medicare finance reforms and because of the promised opportunity for a clear opportunity for the House to soon cast votes on legislation which can restrain or lower prescription drug costs for those Americans not eligible for prospective Medicare prescription drug benefits. This Member will support the advancement of H.R. 4954 to a stage where conferees can craft what this Member would hope to be better legislation if the other body passes its version of a Medicare reform and prescription drug bill.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, we need to strengthen, simplify, and improve Medicare and provide prescription drug coverage for all seniors and disabled Americans. It has been entirely too long that seniors have done without substantial help in affording their prescription drugs. I am committed to working hard to pass prescription drug relief for America's seniors.

Tonight we will pass a fiscally responsible bill that allows seniors and disabled Americans to purchase quality and affordable prescription drugs, offers seniors third party buying power, and provides the security of knowing they are protected from catastrophic pharmaceutical bills.

We desperately need this prescription drug plan. Seniors need this plan to finally receive prescription drug coverage they deserve along with greater choice and flexibility. Further, this plan will substantially help nursing facilities, home health agencies, rural hospitals and local doctors provide better health services and ensure quality health care for folks throughout Georgia.

This bill will not force folks into a Federal Government-run, one-size-fits-all prescription drug plan that has too many rules, regulations, and restrictions and that allows Washington bureaucrats to decide what medicines can and can't be prescribed. This plan is voluntary, and protects those seniors who are already satisfied with their current prescription drug benefit by allowing them to stay in the existing program.

With all these benefits, we need to make sure this legislation is friendly to small businesses and our local pharmacies. I have heard from a number of constituents and share their serious concerns that pharmacists may lose access to networks and our seniors will not gain access to benefits at their local pharmacy. Our hometown pharmacies play a critical role in providing health care in our local communities. We need to ensure that they are not put out of business by this legislation and that pharmacists will have the same opportunity to negotiate price reductions and provide discounted drugs to their customers. It is important that pharmacists be involved in the decision-making process for these plans and have the same opportunities to deliver lower costs to the consumer. I want our pharmacists to be able to continue giving customers top-notch care, and I hope that as the process moves forward on this important bill, these critical issues will be adequately addressed.

It is no secret that prescription drug costs are an overwhelming burden on the health and financial security of seniors and disabled Americans. Too many senior citizens and disabled Americans face decisions between putting food on their table and being able to afford the prescription drugs they need. In the wealthiest country in the world, our seniors should not be forced to make these decisions or do without medication that would allow them to live longer healthier more enjoyable lives, and I look forward to passing a responsible prescription drug plan that helps America's seniors.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, today's seniors increasingly depend on prescription drugs to live healthy lives. But with prescription drug prices skyrocketing, medication is out-of-reach for too many of our Nation's seniors. All too often, we hear of seniors on tight budgets who are forced to choose between medication and their next meal. Congress must ensure that all seniors have access to affordable prescription drug coverage, but the plan that the Republicans have offered falls short. A voluntary benefit added to Medicare would guarantee all seniors access to affordable coverage.

I support a plan that provides a voluntary, guaranteed, defined benefit under the Medicare program. A Medicare prescription drug plan would leave nothing to surprise. Seniors would know how much to expect to pay in premiums and co-payments. All seniors would be eligible to participate. Moreover, this plan would allow Medicare to negotiate the same price breaks for Medicare beneficiaries that are currently enjoyed by other large scale buyers like HMOs and insurance companies.

The Republican plan is riddled with flaws. First, it is not a Medicare benefit, rather it relies on private insurers who have already made clear that they have no intention of providing drug only plans to Medicare beneficiaries. Second, the Republican proposal fails to rein in the high costs of prescription drugs for seniors. Private insurers will not be limited to what they may charge Medicare beneficiaries and will do little to reduce the high out-of-pocket costs that seniors already pay. Third, the GOP plan will only create more hardships for seniors who will be forced to jump through the hoops of their private insurer and be subjected to limited power provider and drug choices.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I support this legislation because it provides a prescription drug benefit to all seniors using Medicare.

In these times of escalating prescription drug prices, it is essential that seniors have access to affordable drugs to meet their medical needs.

The best way to accomplish this goal is to lower the costs of prescription drugs, ensure that all seniors have prescription drug coverage and increase choices of coverage plans.

Patients who live in rural areas and communities deserve the same access to physicians as their urban counterparts. As a member of the Rural Health Care Caucus, I am pleased that this bill addresses inequities between payments made to rural and urban hospitals, wage adjustments for physicians in rural areas and funding for health care organizations.

Not only does this legislation help consumers of prescription drugs, but it also recognizes the importance of pharmacists in providing prescription drugs, helps states cover their Medicare costs and enhances employer-sponsored health care benefits for retirees.

My Democratic colleagues have proposed a bill that costs over $800 billion and sunsets after ten years. But what happens after ten years?

This bill is a common sense, realistic approach that provides permanent coverage for seniors at a sensible cost. It gives special attention to the needs of low-income seniors and those facing exorbitant costs due to catastrophic illness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 467, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended.

The question is on engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

“(B) DETERMINATION.—In determining which of the pharmacy contractors that submitted bids that meet the minimum standards specified under this part and by the Secretary to award a contract, the Secretary shall consider the comparative merits of each bid, as determined on the basis of relevant factors, with respect to—

“(B) BENEFICIARIES RESIDING IN DIFFERENT LOCATIONS.—The Secretary shall develop procedures to ensure that each eligible beneficiary enrolled under this part that resides in different areas in a year is provided the benefits under this part throughout the entire year.

“(b) QUALITY, FINANCIAL, AND OTHER STANDARDS AND PROGRAMS.—In consultation with appropriate pharmacy contractors, pharmacists, and health care professionals with expertise in prescribing, dispensing, and the appropriate use of prescription medicines, the Secretary shall establish standards and programs for the administration of this part to ensure appropriate prescribing, dispensing, and utilization of outpatient medicines under this part, to avoid adverse medicine reactions, and to continually reduce errors in the delivery of medically appropriate covered benefits. The Secretary shall not award a contract to a pharmacy contractor under this part unless the Secretary finds that the contractor agrees to comply with such standards and programs and other terms and conditions as the Secretary shall specify. Such standards and programs shall include the following:

“(F) CONTINUITY OF CARE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The pharmacy contractor shall ensure that, in the case of an eligible beneficiary who loses coverage under this part with such entity under circumstances that would permit a special election period (as established by the Secretary under section 1859C(b)(3)), the contractor will continue to provide coverage under this part to such beneficiary until the beneficiary enrolls and receives such coverage with another pharmacy contractor under this part or, if eligible, with a Medicare+Choice organization.

“(ii) LIMITED PERIOD.—In no event shall a pharmacy contractor be required to provide the extended coverage required under clause (i) beyond the date which is 30 days after the coverage with such contractor would have terminated but for this subparagraph.

“(5) COST DATA.—

“(A) The pharmacy contractor shall make data on prescription medicine negotiated prices (including data on discounts) available to the Secretary.

“(B) The Secretary shall require, either directly or through a pharmacy contractor, that participating pharmacists, physicians, and manufacturers—

“(ii) make such prescription medicine cost data available for review and audit by the Secretary; and

“(iii) certify that the prescription medicine cost data are current, accurate, and complete, and reflect all discounts obtained by the pharmacist or physician in the purchasing of covered outpatient prescription medicines.

Discounts referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall include all volume discounts, manufacturer rebates, prompt payment discounts, free goods, in-kind services, or any other thing of financial value provided explicitly or implicitly in exchange for the purchase of a covered outpatient prescription medicine.

“(c) INCENTIVES FOR COST AND UTILIZATION MANAGEMENT AND QUALITY IMPROVEMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall include in a contract awarded under subsection (b) with a pharmacy contractor such incentives for cost and utilization management and quality improvement as the Secretary may deem appropriate. The contract may provide financial or other incentives to encourage greater savings to the program under this part.

“(2) PERFORMANCE STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall provide for performance standards (which may include monetary bonuses if the standards are met and penalties if the standards are not met), including standards relating to the time taken to answer member and pharmacy inquiries (written or by telephone), the accuracy of responses, claims processing accuracy, online system availability, appeal procedure turnaround time, system availability, the accuracy and timeliness of reports, and level of beneficiary satisfaction.

“(3) OTHER INCENTIVES.—Such incentives under this subsection may also include—

“(A) financial incentives under which savings derived from the substitution of generic and other preferred multi-source medicines in lieu of nongeneric and nonpreferred medicines are made available to pharmacy contractors, pharmacies, beneficiaries, and the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund; and

“(B) any other incentive that the Secretary deems appropriate and likely to be effective in managing costs or utilization or improving quality that does not reduce the access of beneficiaries to medically necessary covered outpatient medicines.

“(4) REQUIREMENTS FOR PROCEDURES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish procedures for making payments to each pharmacy contractor with a contract under this part for the administration of the benefits under this part. The procedures shall provide for the following:

“(i) ADMINISTRATIVE PAYMENT.—Payment of administrative fees for such administration.

“(III) CONTROL OF MEDICARE COSTS.—The contractor contains costs under this part to the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund and enrollees, as measured by generic substitution rates, price discounts, and other factors determined appropriate by the Secretary that do not reduce the access of beneficiaries to medically necessary covered outpatient prescription medicines.

“(B) PERCENTAGE OF PAYMENT TIED TO RISK.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), the Secretary shall determine the percentage of the administrative payments to a pharmacy contractor that will be tied to the performance requirements described in subparagraph (A)(ii).

“(ii) LIMITATION ON RISK TO ENSURE PROGRAM STABILITY.—In order to provide for program stability, the Secretary may not establish a percentage to be adjusted under this paragraph at a level that jeopardizes the ability of a pharmacy contractor to administer the benefits under this part or administer such benefits in a quality manner.

“(C) RISK ADJUSTMENT OF PAYMENTS BASED ON ENROLLEES IN PLAN.—To the extent that a pharmacy contractor is at risk under this paragraph, the procedures established under this paragraph may include a methodology for risk adjusting the payments made to such contractor based on the differences in actuarial risk of different enrollees being served if the Secretary determines such adjustments to be necessary and appropriate.

“(d) AUTHORITY RELATING TO PHARMACY PARTICIPATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, a pharmacy contractor may establish consistent with this part conditions for the participation of pharmacies, including conditions relating to quality (including reduction of medical errors) and technology.

“(d) PROVISION OF BENEFITS TO MEDICARE+CHOICE ENROLLEES.—In the case of an individual who is enrolled under this part and is enrolled in a Medicare+Choice plan under part C, the individual shall be

“(C) PERIODS NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of calculating any 12-month period under subparagraph (A), subject to clause (ii), there shall not be taken into account months for which the enrollee can demonstrate that the enrollee was covered under a group health plan that provides coverage of the cost of prescription medicines whose actuarial value (as defined by the Secretary) to the enrollee equals or exceeds the actuarial value of the benefits provided to an individual enrolled in the outpatient prescription medicine benefit program under this part.

“(ii) APPLICATION.—This subparagraph shall only apply with respect to a coverage period the enrollment for which occurs before the end of the 60-day period that begins on the first day of the month which includes the date on which the plan terminates or reduces its service area (in a manner that results in termination of enrollment), ceases to provide, or reduces the value of the prescription medicine coverage under such plan to below the value of the coverage provided under the program under this part.

“(2) INCORPORATION OF PREMIUM PAYMENT AND GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS PROVISIONS.—The provisions of sections 1840 and 1844(a)(1) shall apply to enrollees under this part in the same manner as they apply to individuals 65 years of age or older enrolled under part B. For purposes of this subsection, any reference in a section referred to in a previous subsection to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund is deemed a reference to the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund.

“(f) ELECTION OF PHARMACY CONTRACTOR TO ADMINISTER BENEFITS.—The Secretary shall establish a process whereby each individual enrolled under this part and residing in a region may elect the pharmacy contractor that will administer the benefits under this part with respect to the individual. “(E) Smoking cessation agents (as specified by the Secretary).

“(2) EXCLUSION.—The term ‘covered outpatient prescription medicine’ does not include—

“(A) medicines or classes of medicines, or their medical uses, which may be excluded from coverage or otherwise restricted under section 1927(d)(2), other than subparagraph (E) thereof (relating to smoking cessation agents), as the Secretary may specify and does not include such other medicines, classes, and uses as the Secretary may specify consistent with the goals of providing quality care and containing costs under this part;

“(B) except as provided in paragraphs (1)(D) and (1)(E), any product which may be distributed to individuals without a prescription;

“(C) any product when furnished as part of, or as incident to, a diagnostic service or any other item or service for which payment may be made under this title; or “(D) any product that is covered under part B of this title.

“(C) PAYMENT OF BENEFITS.—

“(1) COVERED OUTPATIENT PRESCRIPTION MEDICINES.—There shall be paid from the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund, in the case of each enrollee who incurs expenses for medicines with respect to which benefits are payable under this part under subsection (a)(1), amounts equal to the sum of—

“(A) the price for which the medicine is made available under this part (consistent with sections 1859A and 1859B), reduced by any applicable cost-sharing under paragraphs (2) and (3); and “(B) a reasonable dispensing fee.

The price under subparagraph (A) shall in no case exceed the retail price for the medicine involved.

“(2) DEDUCTIBLE.—The amount of payment under paragraph (1) for expenses incurred in a year, beginning with 2005, shall be reduced by an annual deductible equal to the amount specified in section 1859(2) (subject to adjustment under paragraph (8)). Only expenses for countable cost-sharing (as defined in subsection (a)(2)(B)) shall be taken into account in applying this paragraph.

“(3) COINSURANCE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount of payment under paragraph (1) for expenses incurred in a year shall be further reduced (subject to the stop-loss limit under paragraph (4)) by coinsurance as provided under this paragraph.

“(B) PREFERRED MEDICINES.—The coinsurance under this paragraph in the case of a preferred medicine (including a medicine treated as a preferred medicine under paragraph (5)), is equal to 20 percent of the price applicable under paragraph (1)(A) (or such lower percentage as may be provided for under section 1859E(a)(1)(A)(ii)). In this part, the term ‘preferred medicine’ means, with respect to medicines classified within a therapeutic class, those medicines which have been designated as a preferred medicine by the Secretary or the pharmacy contractor involved with respect to that class and (in the case of a nongeneric medicine) with respect to which a contract has been negotiated under this part.

“(C) NONPREFERRED MEDICINES.—The coinsurance under this paragraph in the case of a nonpreferred medicine that is not treated as a preferred medicine under paragraph (5) is equal to the sum of—

“(i) 20 percent of the price for lowest price preferred medicine that is within the same therapeutic class; and

“(ii) the amount by which—

“(I) the price at which the nonpreferred medicine is made available to the enrollee; exceeds “(II) the price of such lowest price preferred medicine.

“(4) NO COINSURANCE ONCE OUT-OF-POCKET EXPENDITURES EQUAL STOP-LOSS LIMIT.—Once an enrollee has incurred aggregate countable cost-sharing under paragraph (3) (including cost-sharing under part B attributable to outpatient prescription drugs or biologicals) equal to the amount specified in section 1859(4) (subject to adjustment under paragraph (8)) for expenses in a year—

“(A) there shall be no coinsurance under paragraph (3) for additional expenses incurred in the year involved; and

“(B) there shall be no coinsurance under part B for additional expenses incurred in the year involved for outpatient prescription drugs and biologicals.

“(5) APPEALS RIGHTS RELATING TO COVERAGE OF NONPREFERRED MEDICINES.—

“(A) PROCEDURES REGARDING THE DETERMINATION OF MEDICINES THAT ARE MEDICALLY NECESSARY.—Each pharmacy contractor shall have in place procedures on a case-by-case basis to treat a nonpreferred medicine as a preferred medicine under this part if the preferred medicine is determined to be not as effective for the enrollee or to have significant adverse effect on the enrollee. Such procedures shall require that such determinations are based on professional medical judgment, the medical condition of the enrollee, and other medical evidence.

“(B) PROCEDURES REGARDING DENIALS OF CARE.—Such contractor shall have in place procedures to ensure—

“(i) a timely internal review for resolution of denials of coverage (in whole or in part and including those regarding the coverage of nonpreferred medicines) in accordance with the medical exigencies of the case and a timely resolution of complaints, by enrollees in the plan, or by providers, pharmacists, and other individuals acting on behalf of each such enrollee (with the enrollee's consent) in accordance with requirements (as established by the Secretary) that are comparable to such requirements for Medicare+Choice organizations under part C;

“(ii) that the entity complies in a timely manner with requirements established by the Secretary that (I) provide for an external review by an independent entity selected by the Secretary of denials of coverage described in clause (i) not resolved in the favor of the beneficiary (or other complainant) under the process described in such clause and (II) are comparable to the external review requirements established for Medicare+Choice organizations under part C; and “(iii) that enrollees are provided with information regarding the appeals procedures under this part at the time of enrollment with a pharmacy contractor under this part and upon request thereafter.

“(6) TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO COVER COSTS OF PART B PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE CATASTROPHIC BENEFIT.—With respect to benefits described in subsection (a)(2), there shall be transferred from the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund amounts equivalent to the elimination of cost-sharing described in such subsection.

“(7) PERMITTING APPLICATION UNDER PART B OF NEGOTIATED PRICES.—For purposes of making payment under part B for medicines that would be covered outpatient prescription medicines but for the exclusion under subparagraph (B) or (C) of subsection (b)(2), the Secretary may elect to apply the payment basis used for payment of covered outpatient prescription medicines under this part instead of the payment basis otherwise used under such part, if it results in a lower cost to the program.

“(8) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to expenses incurred in a year after 2005—

“(i) the deductible under paragraph (2) is equal to the deductible determined under such paragraph (or this subparagraph) for the previous year increased by the percentage increase in per capita program expenditures (as estimated in advance for the year involved under subparagraph (B)); and

“(ii) the stop-loss limit under paragraph (3) is equal to the stop-loss limit determined under such paragraph (or this subparagraph) for the previous year increased by such percentage increase.

The Secretary shall adjust such percentage increase in subsequent years to take into account misestimations made of the per capita program expenditures under clauses (i) and (ii) in previous years. Any increase under this subparagraph that is not a multiple of $10 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $10.

“(B) ESTIMATION OF INCREASE IN PER CAPITA PROGRAM EXPENDITURES.—The Secretary shall before the beginning of each year (beginning with 2006) estimate the percentage increase in average per capita aggregate expenditures from the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund for the year involved compared to the previous year.

“(C) RECONCILIATION.—The Secretary shall also compute (beginning with 2007) the actual percentage increase in such aggregate expenditures in order to provide for reconciliation of deductibles, stop-loss limits, and premiums under the second sentence of subparagraph (A) and under section 1859D(d)(2).

“(d) AMOUNT OF PREMIUMS.—

“(1) MONTHLY PREMIUM RATE IN 2005.—The monthly premium rate in 2005 for prescription medicine benefits under this part is the amount specified in section 1859(1).

“(2) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT FOR SUBSEQUENT YEARS.—The monthly premium rate for a year after 2005 for prescription medicine benefits under this part is equal to the monthly premium rate for the previous year under this subsection increased by the percentage increase in per capita program expenditures (as estimated in advance for the year involved under subsection (c)(8)(B)). The Secretary shall adjust such percentage increase in subsequent years to take into account misestimations made of the per capita program expenditures under the previous sentence in previous years. Any increase under this paragraph that is not a multiple of $1 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $1.

“SEC. 1859E. (a) RULES RELATING TO PROVISION OF BENEFITS.—

“(1) PROVISION OF BENEFITS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In providing benefits under this part, the Secretary (directly or through the contracts with pharmacy contractors) shall employ mechanisms to provide benefits appropriately and efficiently, and those mechanisms may include—

“(i) the use of—

“(II) reduced coinsurance (below 20 percent) to encourage the utilization of appropriate preferred medicines; and

“(III) methods to reduce medication errors and encourage appropriate use of medications; and “(ii) permitting pharmacy contractors, as approved by the Secretary, to make exceptions to section 1859D(c)(3)(C) (relating to cost-sharing for non-preferred medicines) to secure best prices for enrollees so long as the payment amount under section 1859D(c)(1) does not equal zero.

“(B) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the Secretary (directly or through the contracts with pharmacy contractors) from using incentives to encourage enrollees to select generic or other cost-effective medicines, so long as—

“(i) such incentives are designed not to result in any increase in the aggregate expenditures under the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund; and “(ii) a beneficiary’s coinsurance shall be no greater than 20 percent in the case of a preferred medicine (including a nonpreferred medicine treated as a preferred medicine under section 1859D(c)(5)).

“(2) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this part shall preclude the Secretary or a pharmacy contractor from—

“(A) educating prescribing providers, pharmacists, and enrollees about medical and cost benefits of preferred medicines;

“(B) requesting prescribing providers to consider a preferred medicine prior to dispensing of a nonpreferred medicine, as long as such request does not unduly delay the provision of the medicine;

“(C) using mechanisms to encourage enrollees under this part to select cost-effective medicines or less costly means of receiving or administering medicines, including the use of therapeutic interchange programs, disease management programs, and notification to the beneficiary that a more affordable generic medicine equivalent was not selected by the prescribing provider and a statement of the low cost savings to the beneficiary;

“(D) using price negotiations to achieve reduced prices on covered outpatient prescription medicines, including new medicines, medicines for which there are few therapeutic alternatives, and medicines of particular clinical importance to individuals enrolled under this part; and “(E) utilizing information on medicine prices of OECD countries and of other payors in the United States in the negotiation of prices under this part.

“(b) PRICE NEGOTIATIONS PROCESS.—

“(1) REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO PREFERRED MEDICINES.—Negotiations of contracts with manufacturers with respect to covered outpatient prescription medicines under this part shall be conducted in a manner so that—

“(B) if there is more than 1 medicine available in a therapeutic class, there are contracts for at least 2 medicines within such class unless determined clinically inappropriate in accordance with standards established by the Secretary; and

“(C) if there are more than 2 medicines available in a therapeutic class, there is a contract for at least 2 medicines within such class and a contract for generic medicine substitute if available unless determined clinically inappropriate in accordance with standards established by the Secretary.

“(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF THERAPEUTIC CLASSES.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Medicare Prescription Medicine Advisory Committee (established under section 1859H), shall establish for purposes of this part therapeutic classes and assign to such classes covered outpatient prescription medicines.

“(B) advance disclosure to current enrollees and to participating providers and pharmacies in each service area of changes to any such list of preferred medicines and differences in applicable cost-sharing.

“(4) NO REVIEW.—The Secretary’s establishment of therapeutic classes and the assignment of medicines to such classes and the Secretary’s determination of what is a breakthrough medicine are not subject to administrative or judicial review.

“(c) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The Secretary shall ensure that the confidentiality of individually identifiable health information relating to the provision of benefits under this part is protected, consistent with the standards for the privacy of such information promulgated by the Secretary under the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996, or any subsequent comprehensive and more protective set of confidentiality standards enacted into law or promulgated by the Secretary. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as preventing the coordination of data with a State prescription medicine program so long as such program has in place confidentiality standards that are equal to or exceed the standards used by the Secretary.

“(d) FRAUD AND ABUSE SAFEGUARDS.—The Secretary, through the Office of the Inspector General, is authorized and directed to issue regulations establishing appropriate safeguards to prevent fraud and abuse under this part. Such safeguards, at a minimum, should include compliance programs, certification data, audits, and recordkeeping practices. Such payments shall be treated as payments under this part for purposes of sections 1859F and 1859C(e)(2). “(ii) adding new therapeutic classes;

“(iii) assigning to such classes covered outpatient prescription medicines; and

“(iv) identifying breakthrough medicines;

“(E) procedures to ensure that pharmacy contractors with a contract under this part are in compliance with the requirements under this part.

For purposes of this part, a medicine is a ‘breakthrough medicine’ if the Secretary, in consultation with the Committee, determines it is a new product that will make a significant and major improvement by reducing physical or mental illness, reducing mortality, or reducing disability, and that no other product is available to beneficiaries that achieves similar results for the same condition. “(I) IN GENERAL.—If a hospital’s resident level (as defined in clause (iii)(I)) is less than the otherwise applicable resident limit (as defined in clause (iii)(II) for each of the reference periods (as defined in subclause (II)), effective for cost reporting periods beginning on or after January 1, 2003, the otherwise applicable resident limit shall be reduced by 75 percent of the difference between such limit and the reference resident level specified in subclause (III) (or subclause (IV) if applicable).

“(II) REFERENCE PERIODS DEFINED.—In this clause, the term ‘reference periods’ means, for a hospital, the 3 most recent consecutive cost reporting periods of the hospital for which cost reports have been settled (or, if not, submitted) on or before September 30, 2001.

“(ii) REDISTRIBUTION.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to increase the otherwise applicable resident limits for hospitals by an aggregate number estimated by the Secretary that does not exceed the aggregate reduction in such limits attributable to clause (i) (without taking into account any adjustment under subclause (IV) of such clause).

“(IV) PRIORITY FOR RURAL AND SMALL URBAN AREAS.—In determining for which hospitals and residency training programs an increase in the otherwise applicable resident limit is provided under subclause (I), the Secretary shall first distribute the increase to programs of hospitals located in rural areas or in urban areas that are not large urban areas (as defined for purposes of subsection (d)) on a first-come-first-served basis (as determined by the Secretary) based on a demonstration that the hospital will fill the positions made available under this clause and not to exceed an increase of 25 full-time equivalent positions with respect to any hospital.

“(V) APPLICATION OF LOCALITY ADJUSTED NATIONAL AVERAGE PER RESIDENT AMOUNT.—With respect to additional residency positions in a hospital attributable to the increase provided under this clause, notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the approved FTE resident amount is deemed to be equal to the locality adjusted national average per resident amount computed under subparagraph (E) for that hospital.

programs under paragraph (6) or as affecting the ability of a hospital to establish new medical residency training programs under subparagraph (H).

“(iii) RESIDENT LEVEL AND LIMIT DEFINED.—In this subparagraph:

“(I) RESIDENT LEVEL.—The term ‘resident level’ means, with respect to a hospital, the total number of full-time equivalent residents, before the application of weighting factors (as determined under this paragraph), in the fields of allopathic and osteopathic medicine for the hospital.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against this motion, and I object to the unanimous consent request to dispense with the reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will continue to read.

The Clerk continued the reading of the motion to recommit.

Mr. GEPHARDT (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I claim the time in opposition to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask Members to vote "yes" on this motion to recommit and to vote "no" on the Republican plan.

I guess I would like to start tonight's debate with a question: Why did you not allow us to have an alternative to this drug plan? A Democratic House gave Republicans an alternative in 1965 when we debated Medicare. We represent 49 percent of the American people. This is one of the most important issues that we will vote on in this Congress, yet we are not afforded the opportunity to have a clean vote on a clear alternative. Are you afraid? Do you think that too many of Republican Members would vote for our plan?

This process tonight is not worthy of this House of Representatives. This is the people's House. Here the people must be heard. I am deeply disappointed that we were not afforded the opportunity for a clear alternative on this very, very important issue. This is an important issue to all the senior citizens of our country. The Greatest Generation that fought our wars, paid their taxes, raised their children, and made this country great, that Greatest Generation now is too often getting on buses and going to Canada or going to Mexico to get their prescription drugs at prices they can afford. They are making choices between food and taking their drugs. There are senior citizens tonight that are cutting their pills in half because they cannot afford to pay for a whole month's worth.

And tonight, those people are only afforded a vote on a flawed, deficient, wrong plan. If we stack that plan up against what these people are asking for, it fails. It fails. In fact, I would say it is a fraud. I give you what Webster called a fraud: a deception, deliberately practiced to secure unfair or unlawful gain. A piece of trickery. A trick.

The Republican plan has no set premium. They say it might be $35. We are told in States where they have done what the Republicans are doing it is $85. There is no defined benefit. Republicans are turning seniors over to the private insurance market.

This is the same debate that we had in 1965. This is a replay of that debate. If this were 1965, we would not have dreamed of having a Medicare program without a prescription drug benefit. Prescription drugs are now the treatment for most maladies that people face. Why would we not just add this benefit to the Medicare program? Our plan that is in the motion to recommit is simple. It is Medicare: $100 deductible, $25 premium. The government pays 80 percent of the drug cost. The recipient pays 20 percent, and when they hit $2,000 out of pocket, the government picks it all up.

This is what seniors are asking for. They are not asking to go into private insurance. They want a Medicare drug benefit, and they want all the seniors to be amassed to get leverage to get the price of prescription drugs down, down, down.

In the end, I suspect many of you do not support Medicare. I suspect you still want to privatize it. Your plans for Social Security call for privatizing it. In 1965, Republicans predicted Medicare would lead to socialized medicine. One said, "If we pass Medicare, one day we will be telling our children what it was like in America when people were free." Your majority leader has said Medicare is a program that I would have no part of in a free world. He said he deeply resented the fact that when he was 65 he would have to enroll in Medicare.

So you have reverted to form. In the end, this Republican bill listens not to the people of this country. It listens to the pharmaceutical companies and to the insurance companies and is not good for the people's House of Representatives. It should not be passed.

In closing, I would ask all of you to simply tonight think of the people you represent, people like my mother. She is 94 years old. She lives in St. Louis. Every time I go home, she asks me about what is going to happen with the cost of her drugs. She had a stroke about 5 years ago, and the doctor said she will probably never talk again; she will probably never be able to cook or to do household duties. She was able to get the drugs and she is back and she is talking. She is asking me every time I see her about what she is going to do about the cost of her drugs. She has glaucoma and she gets a little bitty bottle of drops that cost $100 a bottle and lasts for 2 weeks. She is lucky. She has got my brother and me, and we send her the money every month so that she can get her drugs.

Think about the thousands of people in your district who are not as lucky as my mother. Think about them. Think about whether they can afford a premium more than $25. Think about whether they can put up with benefits ending in the middle of the year when they cannot get their needed drugs. Think about them when you are not getting the price of drugs down so that they can afford to buy the drugs.

In 1965, this Congress took a historic step, and it passed the greatest program that this country has ever put together. It is the reason that people are living to 80 and 90 and 100 in this country with quality in their lives. We should honor that program tonight and expand it as it should have been many years ago. I am sure there were Members on that day or night in 1965 that voted against the Medicare program and regretted it through the rest of their career and their life. Do not regret your vote tonight. Stand for Medicare and stand for the American people that you represent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Any point of order to be reserved on the motion has now been withdrawn.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) for 5 minutes.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, there is trickery about this place. There is fraud about this House. We could have a motion to recommit forthwith, but that is not what happened tonight. What happened tonight was a motion to recommit promptly. My friend, the chairman of Ways and Means, will explain in just a minute the trickery in that motion.

You see, that motion has a very special effect regarding this debate tonight and the possibility of us passing a prescription drug benefit for the seniors of America tonight. The gentleman from California will explain it to you in just a minute. But if we were to even consider the proposal offered in this motion to recommit seriously, it is almost identical, I believe, to the proposal that was made before the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

It has been scored by CBO now at $971 billion, although our budget, as you know, allocated $350 billion to this effort. It is more expensive than the plan prepared on the Senate side by Senator BOB GRAHAM. The BOB GRAHAM plan is estimated to drive Medicare into insolvency by the year 2016. Just imagine how much sooner Medicare goes bankrupt under the plan our friends on the other side are offering in the motion to recommit.

That is saving the Medicare program, driving it into bankruptcy? We are not alone in that assessment. The AARP looked at our plans, too; and this is what they said about ours: "We appreciate your efforts to contain drug costs, because a Medicare drug benefit alone without effective cost controls will be difficult to sustain as our growing population of older Americans increases its drug utilization."

Our assessment in the committee of this plan, believe it or not, actually raises drug prices to seniors. We asked CBO a simple question. We asked CBO if the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act before us that we presented to this House tonight would lower drug expenditures more than any other House bill introduced in the Congress and scored by CBO, and this is what they responded: "The answer to your question is yes." Yes, lower drug costs. Yes, prescription drug benefits for our seniors. Tonight, not promptly. Yes, it is time to pass this bill tonight for all our moms and dads.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from Missouri mentioned several times 1965; 1965 was 10 years before a Member of this Congress was born, ADAM PUTNAM. For more than 30 of those 37 years, you were in the majority. You never put prescription drugs in Medicare. You had your chance. You never did. And your argument is that you have now in front of us a plan.

The gentleman from Missouri read a definition from Webster's. What my mother would have said, you should have washed your mouth out, because for you to cite the definition of fraud and call it trickery is for everyone to understand what this motion to recommit really is. It is a little word called "forthwith." If this motion had said Mr. GEPHARDT moves to recommit the bill forthwith, it would not have been fraud, and it would not have been trickery. But because that little word is missing and it requires it to be reported promptly, the effect of this motion to recommit is to kill this bill. All of the statements that the gentleman from Missouri made in the well were simply trickery, it was a fraud, because this bill cannot come back and be made law. You are wasting the House's time. Obviously, some of you do not understand the rules under which this House operates.

Mr. Speaker, had they had the guts to put "forthwith" in this motion to recommit, this bill would have come back to the floor, and we could have debated it. You did not put "forthwith" in it. Your motion to recommit is a motion to kill the bill.

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, the House is not in order. The gentleman deserves to be heard as was the minority leader.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Actually, nobody deserves to be heard on this motion to recommit. It is 119 pages of nothing. The way you constructed it, knowingly and on purpose, was to pull a charade on seniors. Nothing in this bill will be available to seniors because you did not put a little word in there, a word that would have proved honesty, a word that would have proved courage, a word that would have let seniors know—

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, the House is not in order.

Mr. Speaker, we listened very patiently to the minority leader. I believe the gentleman deserves to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time in opposition to the motion to recommit has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

SUPPORT OF AMERICAN EAGLE SILVER BULLION PROGRAM ACT

Mr. TIBERI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Financial Services be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2594) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver on the open market when the silver stockpile is depleted, to be used to mint coins, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2594

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Support of American Eagle Silver Bullion Program Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the American Eagle Silver Bullion coin leads the global market, and is the largest and most popular silver coin program in the United States;

(2) established in 1986, the American Eagle Silver Bullion Program is the most successful silver bullion program in the world;

(3) from fiscal year 1995 through fiscal year 2001, the American Eagle Silver Bullion Program generated—

(A) revenues of $264,100,000; and

(B) sufficient profits to significantly reduce the national debt;

(4) with the depletion of silver reserves in the Defense Logistic Agency's Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpile, it is necessary for the Department of the Treasury to acquire silver from other sources in order to preserve the American Eagle Silver Bullion Program;

(5) with the ability to obtain silver from other sources, the United States Mint can continue the highly successful American Eagle Silver Bullion Program, exercising sound business judgment and market acquisition practices in its approach to the silver market, resulting in continuing profitability of the program;

(6) in 2001, silver was commercially produced in 12 States, including, Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, South Dakota, Utah, and Washington;

(7) Nevada is the largest silver producing State in the Nation, producing—

(A) 17,500,000 ounces of silver in 2001; and

(B) 34 percent of United States silver production in 2000;

(8) the mining industry in Idaho is vital to the economy of the State, and the Silver Valley in northern Idaho leads the world in recorded silver production, with over 1,100,000,000 ounces of silver produced between 1884 and 2001;

(9) the largest, active silver producing mine in the Nation is the McCoy/Cove Mine in Nevada, which produced more than 107,000,000 ounces of silver between 1989 and 2001;

(10) the mining industry in Idaho—

(A) employs more than 3,000 people;

(B) contributes more than $900,000,000 to the Idaho economy; and

(C) produces $70,000,000 worth of silver per year;

(11) the silver mines of the Comstock lode, the premier silver producing deposit in Nevada, brought people and wealth to the region, paving the way for statehood in 1864, and giving Nevada its nickname as "the Silver State";

(12) mines in the Silver Valley—

(A) represent an important part of the mining history of Idaho and the United States; and

(B) have served in the past as key components of the United States war effort; and

(13) silver has been mined in Nevada throughout its history, with every significant metal mining camp in Nevada producing some silver.

SEC. 3. PURCHASE OF SILVER BY THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

(a) PURCHASE OF SILVER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 5116(b)(2) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the second sentence the following:

"At such time as the silver stockpile is depleted, the Secretary shall obtain silver as described in paragraph (1) to mint coins authorized under section 5112(e). If it is not economically feasible to obtain such silver, the Secretary may obtain silver for coins authorized under section 5112(e) from other available sources. The Secretary shall not pay more than the average world price for silver under any circumstances. As used in this paragraph, the term 'average world price' means the price determined by a widely recognized commodity exchange at the time the silver is obtained by the Secretary."

(2) RULEMAKING AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue regulations to implement the amendments made by paragraph (1).

(b) STUDY REQUIRED.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall conduct a study of the impact on the United States silver market of the American Eagle Silver Bullion Program, established under section 5112(e) of title 31, United States Code.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit a report of the study conducted under paragraph (1) to the chairman and ranking minority member of—

(A) the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate; and

(B) the Committee on Financial Services of the House of Representatives.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the United States Mint shall prepare and submit to Congress an annual report on the purchases of silver made pursuant to this Act and the amendments made by this Act.

(2) CONCURRENT SUBMISSION.—The report required by paragraph (1) may be incorporated into the annual report of the Director of the United States Mint on the operations of the mint and assay offices, referred to in section 1329 of title 44, United States Code.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 2594, the Support of American Eagle Silver Bullion Program Act.

The language is identical to language introduced in the House by the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. OTTER, as H.R. 4971, and virtually identical to language passed 417-1 by the House Tuesday in H.R. 4846, a larger bill authored by the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. LUCAS.

Mr. Speaker, the American Silver Eagle coin program is the most successful silver bullion coin program in the world. Since its introduction in 1983, nearly 115 million of the one-ounce silver coins have been sold. The coin now controls roughly 80 percent of the silver bullion coin market in the world.

The silver for the coin is .999 fine, much more pure than the old "cartwheel" silver dollars, such as the Morgan dollar, that used to be issued by the United States and which were 90 percent pure.

Silver for the coin has come since the coin's inception from the United States strategic stockpile of silver, as mandated in law. However, a decade ago Congress, noting reduced need, ordered that stockpile and several others sold off, and earlier this month the last of the stockpile was delivered to processors for refining and to be turned into the blanks from which the coins eventually will be struck. While the United States Mint will have adequate coin blanks to meet demand for several weeks yet, I am told the refiners will have to start layoffs of key staff shortly after the Fourth of July if this legislation is not immediately passed and sent to the President.

Mr. Speaker, the silver industry is important to the economy of the United States, and preservation of jobs is an important goal of the Financial Services Committee, especially as this Nation's economy comes out of the doldrums in which it has stood for more than a year. To that end I believe we must pass this legislation and do so quickly, and I ask its immediate approval.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TIBERI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material on S. 2594, the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

REVISIONS TO THE 302(a) ALLOCA- TIONS TO PERMIT THE CONSID- ERATION OF H.R. 4954, THE MEDI- CARE MODERNIZATION AND PRE- SCRIPTION DRUG ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 202 of H. Con. Res. 353, the concurrent resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2003, I am submitting revisions to the 302(a) allocations to permit the consideration of H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002.

Under section 231(d) of H. Con. Res. 353 a separate 302(a) allocation was established for legislation providing a prescription drug benefit, Medicare modernization, and various adjustments for the Medicare program. Section 202 of that resolution permits the chairman of the Budget Committee to increase this allocation for both budget authority and outlays by an amount not to exceed $5 billion in fiscal year 2003 and $350 billion over 10 years for such legislation.

H.R. 4954 establishes a prescription drug benefit in Medicare, adjust certain payments under Medicare, and modernizes Medicare through a Medicare+Choice Competition Program, regulatory reform and a prescription drug discount card. As reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and modified by H. Res. 465, the bill would provide for the Medicare policies delineated in section 202, $4.650 billion in new budget authority and $4.575 billion in outlays for fiscal year 2003. For the 10-year period of 2003 through 2012, this bill would provide $347.270 billion in new budget authority and outlays for such policies.

Accordingly, I am revising the 302(a) allocation for Medicare policies for fiscal year 2003 by $4.650 billion in new budget authority and $4.575 billion in outlays and, for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012, by $347.270 billion in new budget authority and outlays.

Pursuant to section 202 of H. Con. Res. 353, the concurrent resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2003, I have adjusted the 302(a) allocation of new budget authority for Medicare (as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 22, 2002) by $4.650 billion in additional budget authority for fiscal year 2003 and by $347.270 billion in additional budget authority for the period of 2003 through 2012.

Under the special rule set forth in section 231(d) of H. Con. Res. 353, the applicable allocation for H.R. 4954 is the 302(a) allocation for Medicare for fiscal year 2003 and for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012 that was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 22, 2002.

As reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and modified by H. Res. 465, the bill provides $4.650 billion in new budget authority in fiscal year 2003 and $347.270 billion for the period of 2003 through 2012 for the purposes specified in section 202 of H. Con. Res. 353. Hence, the amount of new budget authority related to the Medicare policies set forth in section 202 is equal to the adjusted 302(a) allocation for the applicable periods.

If no further adjustments are made to this allocation, any amendment that would provide any additional new budget authority for Medicare, relative to the bill as amended by the rule, in fiscal year 2003 or for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2012 would exceed the 302(a) allocation in violation of section 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Section 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act prohibits the consideration of amendments that, if enacted, would exceed the appropriate allocation of budget authority made pursuant to section 302(a) for the first year and the total of all fiscal years covered by the applicable budget resolution.

In addition, the bill provides $0.380 billion in new budget authority in fiscal year 2003 and $1.380 billion over the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2007 that is unrelated to the Medicare policies delineated in section 202. Such spending is therefore subject to the general purpose allocation of the Committee on Ways and Means. Any amendment making changes unrelated to the Medicare policies delineated in section 202 that provides in excess of $1.823 billion in new budget authority in fiscal year 2003 or $6.475 billion for the period of fiscal years 2003 through 2007 would also exceed the appropriate 302(a) allocation in violation of Section 302(f).

This statement is issued in accordance with section 312(a) of the Congressional Budget Act.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING LARRY SHEHADEY

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Larry Shehadey on the occasion of being granted an Honorary Doctoral Degree in Humane Letters from California State University, Fresno. Mr. Shehadey received the degree during graduation ceremonies on May 25, 2002.

Shehadey, a prominent Fresno businessman, and patriarch of Producers Dairy Foods, a well-known and respected Fresno-based business, is well known for his generosity and contributions to the community. The eight-story clock tower of the new Fresno State athletic facility will be named "The Larry A. Shehadey Clock Tower," and the Grand Lobby at the Southeast entrance will be named after Shehadey's late wife, Elayne.

In 1949, Shehadey sold a successful soap business to Safeway Supermarkets and bought a major interest in Producers Dairy Foods. Larry built the company into one of the largest independent family owned milk producers in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Larry Shehadey for his honorary degree bestowed by California State University, Fresno. I invite my colleagues to join me in thanking Mr. Shehadey for his support of the Fresno community, and wishing him many more years of continued success.

KATIE WEST: A COWGIRL'S PORTRAIT OF THE OLD WEST

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to artist and cowgirl Katie West for her work portraying the Old West and for her passion for living the cowgirl lifestyle on the Rocking KT Ranch with her quarter horses and collie dogs. Katie has always strived for perfection and is considered one of the finest pen-and-ink artists in the nation.

Besides her pen-and-ink drawings, Katie has earned a worldwide reputation for her oils on canvas, watercolors and her own unique process called petroglyphy, which is fine line engraving in granite, crystal and solid jade. Her technique allows her to hold more detail in granite than anyone in the world. Katie's depictions of animals, particularly horses, and the Old West has brought her wide acclaim. In fact, others have proclaimed her work to be in form and quality a worthy heir to the great western artist of Charles Russell, Frederick Remington and Frank Tenney Johnson. In addition, Katie has been nominated to the Cowgirl Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Her oil paintings, including "The American Cowboy," "Forever Eternal Red, White and Blue," "God Bless the U.S.A.," and a painting of a real cowboy on the range called "Born in the U.S.A.," evoke strong emotions and recall a simpler time when the lines between good and evil seemed as clearly defined as the difference between a white hat and a black one. Her petroglyph engravings also are stirring, including "Comanche," and studies of Clayton Moore as "The Lone Ranger," John Wayne, Gene Autry and Gary Cooper.

Katie also has been a featured artist at a wide-range of art shows and other events across the nation. She has appeared on local and national television shows and her work has been illustrated in magazines from coast to coast. Her art, music and writing have spread joy and happiness to fans young and old all over the world. Collectors of Katie's work include such luminaries and fans of the western tradition as Roy Rogers and Dale Evans, jockeys Bill Shoemaker and Gary Stevens, singer Pat Boone and astronaut Buzz Aldrin.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in expressing the gratitude and appreciation of the United States Congress for the artistry of Katie West. Her dedication to conveying the strength of spirit and the vigor of the Old West in her artwork serves to preserve and rekindle the romanticism and patriotism that have always helped our nation overcome obstacles and adversity. I can think of no better time to have an artist such as Katie West riding the range for our country.

IMPROVING ACCESS TO PHYSICIANS IN MEDICALLY UNDERSERVED AREAS

SPEECH OF

HON. JOHN ELIAS BALDACCI

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 2002

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to offer my support for the bill H.R. 4858, which will extend and expand the J-1 visa waiver program. This legislation is vital for Maine and other states that have difficulties in finding physicians to practice in rural and underserved areas. Workforce shortages threaten access to care for all our citizens, and rural areas in particular face significant obstacles in attracting healthcare professionals. This legislation extends for an additional two years the successful state J-1 visa waiver program.

The ability for states to sponsor foreign physicians began in 1994. Until this authority expired at the end of May, states were able to sponsor 20 physicians a year, allowing them to remain in practice in underserved areas.

Maine's sponsorship of J-1 waiver applicants began in 1997. The State has used close to the maximum number of slots each year. Recently, the State of Maine responded to growing demand by expanding the scope of the waiver program, allowing specialists to apply for J-1 waivers. Additionally, more areas of the state were deemed eligible for such waivers. Consequently, Maine now maximizes its number of available sponsorships. This bill goes the step further to expand the current number of state waivers from 20 to 30, and therefore greatly enhances the ability of my State and many others to meet future needs in underserved areas.

There is some urgency to this matter, because the Department of Agriculture has suspended its processing of J-1 waiver applications. Therefore, this state waiver ability remains the only route left to ensure these primary and specialty physicians remain in underserved areas.

As a Member of the bipartisan House Rural Health Care Coalition, I've been involved in efforts to maintain the current J-1 visa waiver process. This particular waiver program is not a long-term solution to healthcare workforce shortages, but it is providing valuable resources right now to underserved areas.

Mr. Speaker, I thank Congressman JERRY MORAN for introducing this legislation, and encourage all my colleagues to support H.R. 4858.

HONORING DEBORAH A. CHAMBERS, CRNA, MHSA PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSE ANESTHETISTS

HON. LINDSEY O. GRAHAM

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding resident of South Carolina, Deborah A. Chambers. Ms. Chambers will soon complete her year as national president of the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists (AANA). I am very pleased that one of South Carolina's own was tapped as the 2001-2002 president of this prestigious national organization.

The AANA is the professional association that represents over 28,000 practicing Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists (CRNAs). Founded in 1931, the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists is the professional association representing CRNAs nationwide. As you may know, CRNAs administer more than 65 percent of the anesthetics given to patients each year in the United States. CRNAs provide anesthesia for all types of surgical cases and are the sole anesthesia provider in over two-thirds of rural hospitals, affording these medical facilities obstetrical, surgical and trauma stabilization capabilities. They work in every setting in which anesthesia is delivered, including hospital surgical suites and obstetrical delivery rooms; ambulatory surgical centers and the offices of dentists, podiatrists, and plastic surgeons.

Debbie has been a nurse anesthetist since 1981. She received both her anesthesia training and Masters of Health Service Administration at the Medical University of South Carolina, in Charleston, SC. She has been a solo practitioner since 1993 at the Microsurgery Center in Anderson, SC, as well as in both Greenville Memorial Medical Center and Saint Francis Bon Secours Hospital System in Greenville, SC. In addition to her role as a solo practitioner, she was the Clinical Coordinator at the Medical University of South Carolina School of Nurse Anesthesia at Greenville Memorial Medical Center from 1988-2000. Even with her demanding schedule as a practicing nurse anesthetist and AANA president, Debbie has continued to be active as a CRNA representative for pharmaceutical advisory panels such as Pharmacia and Glaxo Smith Kline since 2001 in order to advance the practice of anesthesia.

Debbie has held various leadership positions in the AANA as regional director, vice president, and president-elect before becoming the national president of the AANA in 2001. Ms. Chambers has actively served within the SC Association of Nurse Anesthetist as a District Representative on the board of directors and then in 1994 as state president. Since 1994, Debbie has taken her experience and knowledge from the work place and her AANA leadership roles to lecture on political and academic anesthesia related topics before different professional groups and societies.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me today in recognizing Ms. Deborah A. Chambers, CRNA, MHSA, for her notable ca-

STATEMENT COMMEMORATING THE PASSING OF AMVETS FOUNDING MEMBER ALBERT C. GEREMIA

HON. JAMES R. LANGEVIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I was saddened to learn of the recent passing of a former constituent of Rhode Island's Second District, Albert C. Geremia, native and longtime resident of the City of Providence. Mr. Geremia passed away on June 4th at Hickory House Nursing Home in Honeybrook, Pennsylvania. Mr. Geremia was a Navy veteran of World War II and had a long and distinguished career in management for two Providence firms. As a Navy veteran, Mr. Geremia was a founding member of the Congressionally-chartered veterans service organization, AMVETS, of which Mr. Geremia was the last surviving founder.

Mr. Geremia was one of eighteen individuals who began AMVETS. He worked to secure its Congressional charter and to establish an office in Washington, DC. For his efforts, AMVETS awarded him the organization's "Ray Sawyer Award" at their 1952 National Convention. Since its founding in 1944 in Kansas City, AMVETS has worked tirelessly on behalf of America's veterans and the community at large. Veterans across the nation owe men like Albert Geremia a debt of gratitude for all they have done to keep and protect those benefits promised to our veterans.

Our nation can never have too many men the caliber of Albert Geremia. By helping to found AMVETS, he strove for something larger than himself. A man should not be remembered for the wealth and possessions he earned in life, but rather, for what sort of man he was and what he did to make the world a better place.

Mr. Geremia is survived by his wife, Anne, a daughter, Linda, and son, Paul. I offer them my deepest condolences at this time of great loss, and I hope they will take great comfort in knowing how fondly Albert will be remembered by those whose lives he touched.

HONORING DR. WALTER L. BUSTER, Ed.D.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. Walter Buster upon his retirement as Superintendent of Clovis Unified School District. Dr. Buster was honored at a dinner among his colleagues, friends, and family.

Dr. Buster has dedicated his life to education and has served many communities throughout California. Walter's colleagues agree, regardless of his position, he contributes vision, leadership, and ingenuity to his team. He has orchestrated many programs in the Clovis Unified School District in the seven years he has been there. Four of his top programs illustrate his unique ability to visualize current needs with respect for the future. He implemented "Laptops for Learners," a joint venture with Microsoft and Toshiba to supply all students with laptops to perform their daily classroom activities. Dr. Buster saw another of his visions come to fruition with the development of the Center for Advanced Research and Technology. The center will provide up to 1,800 11th and 12th grade students with advanced project-based training in 12 different technology based laboratory environments. Walter realizes the importance of reading to students, and put into action yet another program, called "Community of Readers." Volunteers from the community dedicate one hour per week to read with the students. Always keeping in mind the importance of being an influential citizen within the community, Dr. Buster started "Character Counts!" a program that teaches students six core principles: responsibility, respect, fairness, caring, citizenship, and trustworthiness.

Dr. Buster's contributions to the Clovis education system are obvious, but he has also made a tremendous impact on the community. He serves on many state and local education and business committees. The State Board of Education recently appointed Dr. Buster to the WestEd Board of Directors, a non-profit research, development and service agency dedicated to improving education and other opportunities for children, youth and adults.

AN AMERICAN COWBOY LEGEND:
BEN COOPER

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the voluminous and noteworthy acting career of Ben Cooper, a performer whose work in the Western genre has informed and entertained generations of youngsters about the history and the myths of the Old West. Many fans may recognize that Ben has always had a special place in his heart for the Western, but perhaps not everyone knows that he met his wife, Pamela, while working on the "Wagon Train" series with Ward Bond.

While Ben is perhaps best known for his role in the non-western drama, "The Rose Tattoo," he made his mark in many terrific Westerns, including "Johnny Guitar," with Joan Crawford and Sterling Hayden. He also had prominent roles in "Jubilee Trail," "The Last Command," "Outlaw's Son," and as Johnny Shattuck in "Duel at Apache Wells." In 1965, Ben starred with Audie Murphy in "Gunfight at Comanche Creek" and "Arizona Raiders."

Before moving to Hollywood, Ben was already an extremely successful performer with 3,200 radio broadcasts and 250 live television shows under his belt. His first film credit was for his work in the Republic Studios film, "The Thunderbirds." While the bulk of Ben's big-screen work was in the 1950s and 1960s, his career has covered more than fifty years, including two 1971 Westerns, "One More Train to Rob" and "Support Your Local Gunfighter," in which he played Colorado Magee. Over the years, Ben appeared in various movies and had many guest appearances on hit television shows, including "Kung Fu: The Legend Continues," "The Fall Guy," "Bonanza," and "The Rifleman." He also had a longrunning part in "The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo" with Claude Akins from 1979 to 1981.

In the 1960s, Ben formed Celebrity Speakers, a group that booked actors on the lecture circuit. Ben's belief that the magnificent and hard-working character actors cast as sidekicks, saddle tramps, bank robbers and in other essential supporting roles were equally capable of acting as goodwill ambassadors for Hollywood has given us all a better understanding of film-making.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in applauding Ben Cooper for exhibiting the true spirit of the American cowboy-hero. Whether Ben wore a white or a black Stetson, his characters were memorable and we should tip our collective hats to Ben Cooper, another legendary hero of the Old West.

TRIBUTE TO NADINE MILFORD, NEW MEXICO MADD STATE CHAIR

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding New Mexican, my friend, Nadine Milford. On June 30, after a successful three-year term, Nadine will step down as the Mothers Against Drunk Driving State Chair. I will take this time to pay tribute to Nadine for her efforts to eliminate the scourge of drunken driving and to improve the lives of countless New Mexicans.

When tragedy strikes, we can do one of two things. We can either allow it to defeat us or we can use the experience to empower us to become an effective advocate for change.

People living in New Mexico in 1992 will never forget that December. What started out as an ordinary holiday season was soon changed into one of devastating heartbreak. It was Christmas Eve and there were pockets of snow across the country. There was a sense of electricity in the air as there usually is during the holidays. At one home in Albuquerque, Bob and Nadine Milford were especially excited about spending the holiday with their children and grandchildren. On Christmas Eve, 1992, gifts were waiting under the Milford's Christmas tree—gifts that never were to be opened.

Across town on that fateful night, Paul and Melanie Cravens picked up Melanie's three daughters—Kandace, Erin and Kacey Woodard—at their father's west-side Albuquerque home. They decided to go see the lights from Nine Mile Hill, west of the city on Interstate 40. But before they topped the hill, they were struck by a pickup driving down the wrong side of the highway.

Melanie and the three girls were killed instantly. Paul Cravens somehow survived, as did the driver of the pickup. Blood tests later showed that the driver was well over the legal alcohol limit. Mr. Speaker, I will not go into the legal debacle that ensued on this case for the next several years, other than to say it was painful and finally created the traction necessary for stronger drunk driving laws.

New Mexicans were inconsolable that Christmas Eve when the local news began reporting what had occurred. Then they got mad. Our citizens demanded action to combat the state's DWI problem—and they got it.

I have been fortunate enough to be a firsthand witness to Nadine's many accomplishments. At the time, I was proudly serving as the Attorney General of New Mexico. Earlier that year, I had appointed a DWI Task Force to study what our state could do to fight drunk driving. We issued our report to the State Legislature as they convened in January.

Throughout the next few years, we worked to lower the legal blood-alcohol limit, toughened penalties for drunk driving and set aside millions of dollars to fund local anti-DWI efforts. The state also began widespread use of sobriety checkpoints and passed a "zero tolerance" law that strips minors of their licenses when they are caught drinking and driving.

Throughout all of this, there was one person in the spotlight who became the focal point of this crusade, and that was Nadine. She could have sunk under the depression that engulfed her. Instead, she leaned on her deep faith and the love of her family and seemingly overnight transformed herself into the new face of DWI reform. Nadine could never have imagined that she would one day be tapped to lead such a worthy fight. Ultimately, I cannot think of anyone better to have done it.

When Nadine was selected as the Mothers Against Drunk Driving State Chair in 1999, she was totally devoted to fighting for MADD's mission to stop drunk-driving. She has also comforted countless numbers of families who have been affected by a drunk driving death. Being so modest, I doubt that Nadine even realizes the positive impact that she has had on New Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, I have touched only on a small list of Nadine's many personal and professional accomplishments. Vera Nadine Fuchs Milford was born in Los Angeles, California and has resided in New Mexico since 1961.

Her husband, Robert, still owns Bobby Joe's Auto Sales. In addition to Melanie, she has four other children—Terrell, Celeste, Pauline and Lance. After graduating from Victory Bible College, Nadine taught school for a time. Of everything she has done, I know how proud she is of her family. She has been a wonderful wife and mother.

New Mexicans feel as though they know Nadine because they have shared so much of her grief over the years. Nadine's motto is "persistence wears resistance." Without a doubt, she has lived this motto throughout the years that have passed since Christmas Eve, 1992. She has stood tall and is truly a hero to many.

Much of my admiration for Nadine Milford stems from her enduring commitment to fighting the good fight. Her values are reflected not only in the way she lives her life, but also in her intelligence and honesty. She will undoubtedly be missed at MADD, but her legacy will endure, and she will never stop advocating for the elimination of drunk driving.

Nadine, I wish you well in whatever future endeavors you pursue.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on an issue that is very important to our nation's veterans. If you were to ask Americans if they knew that their veterans were being denied benefits to which they earned in an effort to save money, there would be outrage. Well Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that that is exactly what has been occurring for many years.

Today, veterans who served our country and retire after 20 years but endure a service-connected disability, have their disability benefits offset dollar-for-dollar by a reduction in their retirement pay. This unfair practice is a disgrace for those who selflessly served our country and sacrificed so much on our behalf. These offset dollars are taken away from veterans seeking to make a better life, send children through college or have an opportunity to spend time with grandchildren.

Well Mr. Speaker, there is good news. After many years of trying to correct this problem, I am very proud that my committee, the House Armed Services Committee, included a provision granting concurrent receipt for our most severely disabled retirees in H.R. 4546, the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003. This provision provides $5.8 billion to phase in, over a five-year period, an elimination of the concurrent receipt offset for disabled retirees with a disability rating of 60 percent or greater. Though the offset is not eliminated completely for all disabled veterans, it is a first step. This measure passed the House on May 9, 2002, by a vote of 359–58.

Mr. Speaker, there is still more work to be done. It is my understanding that, like the House, the Senate has included a concurrent receipt provision in their authorization bill and I plan on working actively with them on this issue when this bill is brought to conference. Our veterans earn their retired pay by committing themselves to the defense of our country and I believe there is no better way to honor America than to give our nation's veterans all the benefits to which they are entitled.

CONGRATULATING THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF TRACEY ALLNUTT ON WINNING THE 13TH DISTRICT OF FLORIDA CONGRESSIONAL ART COMPETITION

HON. DAN MILLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the winners of the Congressional Arts Competition—particularly to congratulate Tracey Allnutt of Sarasota Florida, a senior at Riverview High School. Next year she will be attending the Ringling School of Art in Sarasota in pursuit of a degree in art history.

A panel of judges from my congressional district evaluated the contestants' work and from this pool of contestants Tracey's was selected as the winner. Her work of art symbolizes the rising and enduring faith and patriotism of America's youth in the wake of the events of September 11th. It is fitting that this artwork will be displayed in our nation's Capitol.

I would like to use this time to honor Tracey and the other winners of the Congressional Arts Competition and encourage the youth of our nation to continue their patriotic enterprises and artistic endeavors.

COMMENDING CONTRIBUTIONS OF ROOFING PROFESSIONALS INVOLVED IN REBUILDING OF PENTAGON

SPEECH OF

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 2002

Mr. GARY MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support H. Con. Res. 424 Commending the Patriotic Contributions of Roofing Professionals Involved in the Rebuilding of the Pentagon.

First, I want to thank Mr. MANZULLO for introducing this resolution and bringing it to the floor. Several months ago, I gave a one minute speech recognizing the role small roofing contracting companies have played in rebuilding over an acre of the Pentagon's roof, and these efforts are certainly worthy of continued mention.

What I find most moving about this volunteer effort, is how deeply committed these roofing professionals are. Men and women have traveled from all over the U.S. to help put a roof back on the Pentagon. There are numerous stories about how they kept working through Thanksgiving and Christmas to stay on an ambitious schedule.

These men and women felt compelled to do this because to them, this is how we win, this is how we beat the terrorists. And they're right. Whether they have donated supplies, spent time at the site working, or given money, these individuals and companies should be proud of their contribution towards healing our nation.

In addition, I would also like to thank the Department of Defense for working with the National Roofing Contractors' Association to make this volunteer effort so successful.

HONORING DAN MALCOLM

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dan Malcolm, editor of American Vineyard, on the 10th anniversary of his magazine's publication.

Dan has been the patron of American Vineyard through its ten years and he has every reason to be proud of everything the magazine has accomplished. In 1993, the magazine became the highest grower circulated grape publication in the country. Then, in 1994, American Vineyard journeyed to Mexico, and the growers were both impressed by what they saw and encouraged to compete with the growers south of the border. The magazine hosted its first grape expo in Caruthers in 1996 and was pleasantly surprised by the amount of support received, over a thousand growers attended. In 1998, Dan Malcolm was honored with the Viticulture & Enology Research Center's Grape Day Industry Award. American Vineyard published their biggest issue in 2001 and the magazine is still going strong.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dan Malcolm for his vision and unending pursuit of his ambitions. I invite my colleagues to join me in thanking him for his contribution to agriculture and the community and wishing him and his family continued success.

HON. JEFF FLAKE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request the opportunity to record my position on rollcall votes 249, 250, 251, and 252. I was regrettably absent from the chamber on Monday, June 24, 2002 during rollcall votes 249, 250, 251 and 252. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on all four votes.

TRIBUTE TO MITCH KEHETIAN

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate an articulate and well-respected voice in local journalism, Mitch Kehetian, as he is honored by the Metro Detroit Chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists with a Lifetime Achievement Award.

Mr. Kehetian has served the public for almost fifty years as a reporter and editor of community newspapers. In his early twenties he went to work as a reporter for the Detroit Times. He brought his reporting skills to Macomb County, Michigan at the Mount Clemens Monitor-Leader. The Monitor-Leader became the Macomb Daily and Mr. Kehetian rose through the ranks to his current position as Editorial Page Editor.

Mr. Kehetian's work can be summarized with three words: community, responsibility, and passion. He has editorialized about the widest range of issues, always using his straightforward, commonsense approach to make a clear and concise point. He has written about a variety of local issues, from weighing in on a controversial community issue, to honoring a young person or community activist. He has written about regional issues always paying special attention to the future of the City of Detroit, about issues impacting our entire State and vital national issues including domestic policy, politics and international affairs. He has opined passionately about human rights, highlighting the plight of the Iraqi people under Saddam Hussein, the children of Afghanistan, the conflict in the Middle East, and the longstanding refusal by Turkey to acknowledge the Armenian Genocide.

In his work, especially the latter editorials, you can see an image of Mitch Kehetian himself. On April 29, 2002, Mr. Kehetian wrote, "Through the years, I've written reports about my journey to historical, Turkish-occupied Armenia in search of my Armenian roots. I found that the homeland of my ancestors lacks historical markers to tell the curious that for 3,000 years Armenians lived in what today is eastern Turkey. Through the years I've been repeatedly asked why people of Armenian heritage can't forget what happened in 1915-20, especially those of my generation who weren't even born then. I cannot forget. As a child growing up in southwest Detroit's ethnic neighborhood, I had only one grandparent, one aunt, three uncles and a handful of cousins. All the others were murdered in the Turkish genocide of the Armenian people. . . . This American of Armenian heritage cannot forget."

Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed the opportunity to work in the same communities as Mitch Kehetian and to observe his work. He has been a voice for elevating the role of Macomb County and its place in the State of Michigan. Today, I join the residents of Macomb County, and his colleagues in the journalism profession, in saluting his distinguished career, thanking him for his years of service, and encouraging him to keep those editorials coming.

TURKEY NATO AND AFGHAN PEACEKEEPING

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, last week, the command of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Afghanistan was handed over to Turkish military forces after a successful six months, under the command of British forces.

As the Chairman of the Europe Subcommittee, I want to first congratulate and commend the British forces for the excellent work they did to establish an atmosphere of calm and security at the critical time in which the people of Afghanistan were consolidating their political and economic future. The Brits are owed a great deal of thanks.

The arrival of the Turkish command marks a new period for the ISAF operation, for the new government of Afghanistan and for Turkey itself. The leadership of Turkey, a predominantly Muslim state sends a clear message that the international campaign against terrorism does not have anything to do with Islam as a religion and reinforces the effort we have been trying to make that the United States has Muslim allies in this effort. For Turkey, taking command of ISAF is an acknowledgment of Turkey's important position in that region and the role it can play in the Muslim world. It is also a signal of the important prestige Turkey has accumulated both here in the United States and in the West. The government in Ankara should be commended for its willingness to take on this critically important role. We congratulate Turkey and wish their military contingent the best of success.

Finally, I would be remiss if I did not point out for commendation all of the other nations whose military forces are currently serving in Afghanistan. ISAF does have some 5,000 troops serving in Afghanistan and they all deserve our thanks and continued support. I think it is also important to note that the majority of the nineteen countries who have contributed forces to ISAF are not only European, but are from our NATO partners or NATO candidate countries. I believe this is an important point that is often overlooked by those who have criticized Alliances such as NATO for not being willing or capable of conducting missions abroad. The Afghanistan campaign was not a NATO mission but the fact that so many of our NATO partners have sent troops there is a testament to the importance of the Alliance and why we in this country should continue to strongly support NATO. Consider where we would be today if NATO was no longer relevant to our security needs. Whose 5,000 troops would be patrolling the streets of Kabul and ensuring the peaceful transition of that country.

So, again we salute the British forces for a job well done. We congratulate and welcome the Turkish leadership of ISAF and we thank our NATO allies and European friends for their continued support in Afghanistan and in the campaign against global terror.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN SUPPORT OF THE DEMOCRATIC
SUBSTITUTE TO H.R. 4931, RE-TIREMENT SAVINGS SECURITY ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 21, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition of H.R. 4931, the Republicans' so-called Retirement Security Savings Act.

Like every other tax break the Republican leadership has brought to the floor lately, this bill is more about their political pandering than our priorities. But, I refuse to play games with the hard-earned pensions of working Americans while Republicans line the pockets of their wealthy contributors.

We ought to bring a pension bill to the floor that encourages saving and increases employee participation in pension plans. Unfortunately, the Republican bill does little to help average Americans save for retirement. It simply benefits the wealthiest Americans. Forty-two percent of the tax breaks proposed by the Republicans would go to the richest five percent of taxpayers.

Meanwhile, if you are an average American with a pension or retirement account, the Republican plan does nothing to help you build upon that savings. Republicans are obviously content with the fact that most Americans have only about $12,000 put away for retirement. I'm sure an Arthur Andersen accountant might be able to convince someone that $12,000 is sufficient. But, to think the Republicans would expect that most Americans would believe it just shows how out of touch they are.

I support the Democratic plan for retirement security. It puts money where our mouth is when we say we want Americans to save. It rewards them for putting money away for their retirement by giving them a $1,000 tax credit if they contribute to an employer-sponsored pension plan or an IRA.

Republicans supported giving lower and middle-income families this credit in the past. They included it in last year's tax bill. But, for some reason they won't support it today. Why not?

Maybe Republicans don't think it's necessary because they've already passed their huge tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans? Maybe they've just gotten too close with their corporate donors to appreciate the struggles many Americans face in building a secure retirement?

Whatever the answer may be, it is clear Republicans haven't learned anything from the Enron fiasco. This bill's second, major flaw is that does nothing to enforce corporate accountability when it comes to pensions. It doesn't prevent huge scams like Enron from being carried out on the backs of employees—it makes it easier. We shouldn't allow those that work hard for their retirement to be ripped off while a handful of greedy executives walk away with millions.

We should be on this floor today making sure that Enron never happens again. I support the Democratic plan because it will lock in real pension protection and ensure that workers are fairly compensated when companies fail. But, instead, we're stuck having to vote on a Republican bill that does nothing but reward corporate greed at the expense of millions of hard-working Americans.

I urge my colleagues to stand up for America's families, support the sensible Democratic plan for retirement security, and vote down the Republican bill.

SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAM
PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. STEPHEN F. LYNCH

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 2002

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, today I stand before you to express my concerns on strengthening and preserving our nation's Social Security system.

We are here today to discuss, H.R. 4070, The Social Security Programs Protection Act. However, I have grave concerns about what we are NOT discussing—namely, privatization, one of the biggest threats facing the Social Security Program today.

Last week, Democrats filed a discharge petition to demand a public debate on privatization. Democrats think the public has a right to know about the true effects of privatization. Under the Republican Privatization Plan, we would see cuts in guaranteed benefits, massive raids on the Social Security Trust Funds, and the threat that privatization poses to the ability of the system to pay benefits to the baby-boomer generation.

Mr. Speaker, Congress has a responsibility to our next generation to ensure that Social Security will be there for them. Social Security is more than a program, it is a promise. The Republican Leadership is refusing to bring their privatization bills to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, we have missed our mission of strengthening Social Security. We have missed our opportunity to strike, a true course consistent with the great traditions in this country of meeting the challenges of each generation. We can only live up to our responsibilities by preserving and strengthening our Social Security system. American families work hard to pay into the system, and they should be able to rely on Social Security when they retire.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to live up to the responsibility that has been bestowed upon us and to strengthen and preserve our Social Security system.

Thank you, I yield the remainder of my time.

CHILD OBSCENITY AND PORNOGRAPHY
PREVENTION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 2002

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I voted in favor of H.R. 4623, the Child Obscenity and Pornography Prevention Act of 2002. I strongly support the goal of this legislation, which is to protect children from sexual exploitation.

This legislation is in response to the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Ashcroft v. The Free Speech Coalition, which struck down portions of the Child Pornography Prevention Act that made it illegal to create, distribute or possess "virtual" child pornography produced by means other than using real children, such as using adult actors who look like children or through computer generated images.

In an effort to pass constitutional muster, this bill prohibits the creation, distribution or possession of computer generated images that appear "virtually indistinguishable" from that of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct. We should not allow technological advances to hamper law enforcement's ability to prosecute individuals for child pornography. Law enforcement agencies must have all necessary tools to eliminate sexual exploitation of innocent children.

However, I have concerns about how this legislation affects free speech protections under the First Amendment. H.R. 4623 criminalizes speech that not only is not obscene, but that has redeeming literary, artistic, or other social value. This includes therapists and academic researchers who use computer-generated images in their research, and filmmakers who create explicit anti-child abuse documentaries.

While I am hopeful that this legislation will pass constitutional scrutiny we must also ensure that we do not infringe upon the First Amendment. I believe we must strive to eliminate child pornography, a despicable exploitation of our children, while at the same time respecting free speech.

LEHIGH VALLEY HERO—
STEPHANIE McKENNA

HON. PATRICK J. TOOMEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to share my Report from Pennsylvania for my colleagues and the American people.

All across Pennsylvania's 15th Congressional District there are some amazing people who do good things to make our communities a better place. These are individuals of all ages who truly make a difference and help others.

I like to call these individuals Lehigh Valley Heroes for their good deeds and efforts.

Today, I would like to recognize Bethlehem resident Stephanie McKenna as a Lehigh Valley Hero. She is working hard to make a difference in her community.

Stephanie, a single mother of three and guardian of two others had always thought of ways to spend more time with her children. A year ago, she quit her high powered Manhattan job to put in motion the idea she had for a way to be more in touch with her children while helping other children in the community. This idea was called Teen Destiny, a one-year residential program for teenage boys who are troubled, but haven't yet crossed into the juvenile detention system.

This program, which could start as early as September is run by a seven-member board of directors and has a $1.2 million agreement of sale for a 189-acre farm in Upper Mount Bethel Township.

This working farm would be the temporary home for teenage boys. After school and on weekends, the boys would learn to cook, clean and do laundry through the 4-H, and try their hand at farming. Stephanie hopes that by taking the teenagers into a new environment, giving them close supervision and lots of attention, she and a staff of professional counselors and tutors can turn the teenagers around before they succumb to alcohol, drugs or gangs.

Stephanie McKenna is selflessly working to make a difference in the lives of many teenage boys in need of direction, and therefore she is a Lehigh Valley Hero in my book.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my Report from Pennsylvania.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE PACIFIC AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL HIGHER EDUCATION SCHOOLS COUNCIL INAUGURATION

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into the RECORD a recent speech given by a distinguished former Member of this body, Former Congressman Lester L. Wolff before an Assembly of Asian educators on May 20th in New York. Congressman Wolff served as Chairman of the House Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee and is now Chairman of the Pacific Community Institute.

INAUGURATION OF THE PACIFIC AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL HIGHER EDUCATION SCHOOLS COUNCIL

With a new look and focus after two decades of service, the Pacific Community Institute (PCI), continues to work towards its purpose of creating a community of interests in the Pacific Rim. With those goals in mind, I am proud to announce today the inauguration of the Pacific American International Higher Education Schools Council.

Because the United States was originally an off-shoot of Europe, there is a historical tendency to think of the U.S. as an Atlantic nation only. However, the United States has historically been involved in the Pacific since 1784, its Pacific Coast is longer than the Atlantic Coast, and the State of Hawaii is in the Pacific. The commitment of the United States to the Pacific has also been sealed in active diplomacy and several wars for freedom and democracy.

The basic principle of the Pacific Community Institute (PCI) is to promote community, based upon respect for individuals and the traditions of its members. Building on ties of trade and kinship, which have long existed among the countries of the Pacific Rim, PCI seeks to facilitate interaction and cooperation toward the solution of common problems. PCI aims to obviate such problems by enabling the nations of the Pacific Rim to explore together, at the working level, means to contemporary activities, and new, creative solutions to the common concerns.

PCI is supplementary and supportive without competing with existing organizations.

PCI believes that true community may be facilitated by the revolution in communication and information technology, but that it must be created by people in concert, in person. For that reason, PCI remains committed to facilitating face-to-face interaction as significant step toward building a climate of cooperation. The advent of the World Wide Web has made the task of the PCI simpler in some respects, by permitting the movement of information in a more efficient manner. Yet without a sense of the human being sending an e-mail, or the organization maintaining a website, the official, the executive, or the academic who may be seeking a solution remains uncertain and unconvinced.

The Pacific Community Institute seeks today to promote international education based on the concept that both sides of the Pacific can learn from each other. PCI is currently working to develop a graduate level, Western-style curriculum in business. The role of the PCI is to oversee the content of the program, curriculum, the credentials of the instructors, and performance of graduates. In general, PCI fosters the idea of appropriate conferences designed to enhance the sort of personal contact that makes an e-mail message a genuine commodity, and not a nuisance.

The Pacific Community Institute, in its role to improve inter-relationships, understanding, and economic well-being within the nations of the Pacific region, is in the process of organizing such an organization: The Pacific American International Higher Education Schools Council. The Council, composed of an elite professional group of Academicians, will create and oversee an MBA program to meet the high standards of the International Community and the special needs of the educational requirements of young people residing in the Pacific Rim.

Selected to head the Council is Dr. Wayne Patterson who has served as Dean in Residence of the National Council of Graduate Schools. Invitations to participate in the Council have been extended to: Dr. Orlando L. Taylor, Dean of Graduate Schools at Howard University, former Chair of the Board of Directors of the Council of Graduate Schools; Dr. Marcia Welsh, Provost and V.P., Academic Affairs, Adelphi University; Dr. Sung Lee, former Vice Provost, Michigan Tech, now executive at Carnegie Mellon; Dr. Thomas Maresh, former Dean of the Graduate School at Oregon State University; Dr. J. Kent Morrison, President at Walden University; Dr. Robert Ringold, Provost at Purdue University; Dr. Robert Rudd, former Dean of School of Business at Charleston College and have met with a strong positive response.

The Pacific American University was founded in 2002, as a division of the Northern Institute of Business Management, an affiliate of The Pacific Community Institute, Inc., in order to bring the highest quality of American-developed higher education to students in China and other Pacific region countries. The initial degree offering by the Pacific American University is the Master of Business Administration. The curriculum is designed to be aligned with many MBA programs in the United States.

The Pacific American University is a research-oriented private university dedicated to providing educational experiences of exceptional quality, based on the traditions of American higher education, to students of high academic potential in China and in other countries throughout the Pacific region. Further, the University is dedicated to attracting and sustaining a cadre of faculty who are, through their teaching and research, committed to the development of distinguished and compassionate graduates and to the quest for solutions to human and social problems.

INTERNATIONAL DAY IN SUPPORT OF THE VICTIMS OF TORTURE

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution condemning the use of torture and other forms of cruel, inhumane, or degrading treatment or punishment wherever they occur—in the United States and other countries. As the United States has become a safe haven for hundreds of thousands of torture victims, the resolution also expresses support for the victims of these heinous acts. I am pleased that I am joined by my colleagues, Representatives STENY HOYER, BEN CARDIN, and ALCEE HASTINGS, as original cosponsors of the measure. The Chairman of the Helsinki Commission, Senator BEN NIGHORSE CAMPBELL, is introducing an identical resolution in the Senate.

Torture remains the weapon of choice of oppressive regimes. In the worst cases, it is systematically used to silence political opposition, punish religious minorities, and target those who are ethnically or racially different from those in power.

It is estimated that some 500,000 torture survivors live in this country alone, most of whom came here as refugees. The debilitating effects of torture often last a lifetime and require substantial medical, psychological and other treatment. Although they are aided by 34 centers in 19 states, the needs of the victims are extensive. I will continue to support funding for torture treatment centers in the United States, as well as foreign treatment centers funded through the U.S. Agency for International Development, and multilateral efforts supported by the UN Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture. Mr. Speaker, I also want to commend the non-governmental organizations which seek to document this abuse and hold perpetrators accountable.

At the same time, I will be working to ensure that the United States continues to play a leadership role in the battle against torture by signaling our unwavering condemnation of this egregious practice. It is particularly important that we send that message now, when irresponsible voices are suggesting that torture may be a necessary tool against terror. Torture creates terror. That is its purpose, and it makes no sense to wage war to defend our great democratic republic and respect for the rule of law and use methods that denigrate the very values we seek to protect. Torture is unconstitutional, barred by the laws of the United States and the laws of all civilized nations.

The resolution that Sen. CAMPBELL and I are introducing underscores that message. It recognizes the United Nations International Day in Support of the Victims of Torture—June 26 each year—and encourages the training of law enforcement personnel who are involved in the custody, interrogation, or treatment of any individual who is arrested, detained, or imprisoned, with the hope of preventing the use of this practice. The resolution also calls on the Secretary of State to seek, at relevant international fora, the adoption of an agreement to treat confessions and other evidence obtained through torture or other forms of cruel, inhumane, or degrading treatment or punishment, as inadmissible in any legal proceeding; and to prohibit, in law and in practice, incommunicado detention of prisoners.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution and giving it timely consideration.

POLICE SECURITY PROTECTION ACT

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to help America's law enforcement officers by introducing the Police Security Protection Act. This legislation provides police officers a tax credit for the purchase of armored vests.

As recent events have reminded us, professional law enforcement officers put their lives on the line each and every day. Reducing the tax liability of law enforcement officers so they can afford armored vests is one of the best ways Congress can help and encourage these brave men and women. After all, an armored vest could literally make the difference between life or death for a police officer. I hope my colleagues will join me in helping our nation's law enforcement officers by cosponsoring the Police Security Protection Act.

MOROCCO'S ACTIVE ROLE IN THE WAR AGAINST INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM

HON. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, in the past 2 weeks, both the Washington Post and The New York Times have devoted page-one stories to the extraordinary support and cooperation Morocco has been providing the United States in the war against terrorism. At a time when many in the media and elsewhere have been questioning whether the resolve of U.S. allies and friends has been slackening, Morocco's actions take on even greater significance.

Specifically, these stories refer to the arrests, announced on June 10, of three Saudi nationals who are believed to be part of the al Qaeda network. According to the Washington Post, June 16, 2002, which cited senior Moroccan officials, these men "have told interrogators that they escaped from Afghanistan and came to Morocco on a mission to use bomb-laden speedboats for suicide attacks on U.S. and British warships in the Strait of Gibraltar." Moreover, they have provided "what officials describe as a fuller understanding of al Qaeda's strategy since its expulsion from Afghanistan . . ."

Days later, on June 19, Moroccan authorities revealed they had taken into custody another Saudi national—this one a senior operative who reputedly ran several of Osama bin Laden's training camps in Afghanistan, helped direct the evacuation of al Qaeda from Afghanistan, and, in the words of the BBC, June 19, 2002, is "central to al Qaeda's international recruiting network . . ." This individual is said to be a close associate of Abu Zubaydah, the suspected al Qaeda operations chief who was apprehended in Pakistan and who has apparently been giving U.S. interrogators valuable information.

On June 26, the New York Times and the French press agency AFP carried stories of still more arrests by Moroccan authorities, including yet another five Saudi nationals and three of their local contacts.

Mr. Speaker, these developments represent important breakthroughs in the long and difficult struggle against the forces of terror—and the very nature of that struggle requires that we have strong, reliable, consistent partners. Thankfully, Morocco is such a partner. As the New York Times noted, June 24, 2002, "Morocco, the first Muslim country to condemn the attacks of September 11, has escaped the terrorism that plagues its neighbors." And that newspaper went on to quote a Western diplomat in Morocco as saying, "The Moroccans worked hard to help nail these guys."

The Washington Post, June 16, 2002, quoted a Western diplomat as saying, "The Moroccans take very seriously their 225-year old relationship with the United States. There is good cooperation . . . They're serious." The diplomat continued: "The Moroccans have asked for nothing. Nothing. They made a decision to cooperate and they stuck to it."

Mr. Speaker, we can only hope that other friends of the United States will prove to be as helpful. In the meantime, let us thank Morocco for its ongoing support and cooperation—and let us continue to work closely with this friend, our oldest and most faithful ally in the entire Arab and Muslim world.

ALBERT GRAVES, A PUBLIC SERVANT AND AN INSPIRATION

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Albert Graves, a lawyer, a businessman, and a community leader who died on June 13, 2002, at the age of 92. It has been written of Albert that he built his power in an unusual way by helping the community whenever he could, without regard for who got credit.

Albert Graves was born on Christmas Day, 1909, in Hope, AR. Perhaps that was an indication of what a gift he would become to that community. After graduating from Hope High School in 1926 and Hendrix College in 1930, Albert received his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1933 and soon joined his father, O.A. Graves, in practicing law. The young attorney made a name for himself in Hope, and at the age of 25 was elected mayor, the youngest in that city's history.

Albert served as mayor of Hope from 1935 to 1939, and from 1941 to 1947. His career in public service was not limited to city hall; he served as president of the Hope School Board from 1953–57, and was chairman of the Hope Water and Light Commission. Albert was quite active in Arkansas's law community and was a member of numerous associations and foundations, and he served as chairman of the State Judicial Nominations Committee each year from 1978 until 1982. He was also quite active in the First United Methodist Church, and taught the Century Bible Class for more than 50 years.

Albert Graves was Hempstead County's Citizen of the Year in 1978, and was an inspiration and a model for his community. He was well-respected, well-loved, and will be fondly remembered.

As a child growing up and attending public school in Hope, I saw him as one who was involved in his community, a successful businessman and accomplished attorney who took the time to give back. I looked up to him and was inspired by his example.

My heart goes out to his wife, Marilyn, his three children, seven grandchildren, and 16 great-grandchildren in what I know is a difficult time for them. I am keeping all of them in my thoughts and in my prayers. While Albert Graves may no longer be with us, his life and legacy live on in the lives of all those he touched.

A TRIBUTE TO FATHER PAUL J. NOMELLINI ON THE OCCASION OF THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF HIS ORDINATION AND HIS RETIREMENT

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, it was in 1973 that Brother Paul Nomellini, a professed religious brother in the Congregation of the Holy Cross of Notre Dame, was flying to Washington D.C. to attend a conference here in Georgetown. Then a teacher in the inner city of Chicago, Brother Paul on that flight met and struck up a conversation with a former member of this body and a former member of my delegation, then-Congressman Gerald Ford.

They shared their flight in the innocence of travelers unaware of their real destination. By the end of the year, Congressman Ford, the politician, had become Vice President Ford and was on his way to becoming President Ford. Brother Nomellini, the teacher and religious brother, would that same year acknowledge his calling to the priesthood. He would in 1973 embark on the path to Holy Orders that would eventually lead him to be leader of the congregation of St. Mary Queen of Peace Church in Kingsford, Michigan.

Because our futures are so uncertain, Mr. Speaker, it's best we entrust our lives to Good Hands, and I'm sure that President Ford as well as Father Nomellini have long acknowledge the Lord's role in helping to shape their lives and destinies. So I rise tonight, Mr. Speaker, to report that a major chapter in the life of Father Nomellini will close on July 1, this coming weekend, when the good pastor marks his 25th anniversary as a priest and goes into retirement.

Despite his years of teaching in Illinois and Ohio, Father Nomellini is a true son of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. He is a native of Hancock on Michigan's Keweenaw Peninsula and is a graduate of Hancock High School. He attended Hancock's Soumi College—now Finlandia University—before going on to the University of Notre Dame, where he received his bachelor's degree in English and took his vows as a religious brother. He later earned a master's degree in guidance and counseling from Butler University in Indianapolis, Indiana, and a master's degree in theology from Pope John XXIII National Seminary in Weston, Massachusetts.

An ordained priest since 1977, Father Nomellini, has served as pastor of the St. Mary Queen of Peace Parish in Kingsford for nine years. Before that, he served in parishes across the Upper Peninsula, including St. Peter's Cathedral and St. Michael Parish in Marquette, St. Joseph and Nativity parishes in Sault Ste. Marie, St. Mary & St. Joseph Parish in Iron Mountain, St. Joseph Parish in Rudyard, Holy Family Mission in Barbeau, Sacred Heart Parish in Schaffer, St. Michael Parish in Perronville, St. Joseph Mission in Foster City, and St. George Parish in Bark River.

In a recent interview with the Iron Mountain Daily News, Father Nomellini told reporter Linda Lobeck of his great love of teaching, but he spoke with the greatest pride of the many accomplishments and the community commitment of his Kingsford parishioners. From church improvements and expansions to local outreach programs, this parish surely reflects the spirit and love of its priest for the community.

Mr. Speaker, my wife Laurie and I will attend Father Nomellini's 25th Anniversary and Retirement Party on July 1. We will join with parishioners in lamenting his departure from the parish, and we will wish him well on his planned retirement projects, which, he told the Daily News, include "reading, listening to music, traveling and going to musicals and plays." Maybe, he said, he'll exercise that love of English and write a book or play or two. But we'll wink privately, Mr. Speaker, because we know that we are all travelers, innocent of the knowledge only God holds for our futures, and God may yet have revealed another plan for Father Nomellini. In the past I nominated him to be Chaplain of the U.S. House, and he has attended the National Prayer Breakfast here in Washington, D.C. One thing I know for sure—Father Paul will go where God and his heart command him.

So I ask you and our House colleagues to join me in wishing Father Paul Nomellini our greatest thanks for his life of service as a teacher, a pastor, and a guiding friend, and I ask you to join me in wishing him all the best in his retirement. May God grant him many wonderful years.

H.R. 4560, THE AUCTION REFORM ACT OF 2002

HON. W.J. (BILLY) TAUZIN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, "H.R. 4560 will clarify Congress's position on the 700MHz band width. In lieu of Committee action, the following points should be noted for the record."

Section 6 ensures that the Federal Communications Commission's (FCC) policies that are designed to clear channels 52–69 do not result in an increased level of interference to "in core" channels 2–51, by permitting the operation of an analog facility on a channel assigned for digital transmissions was not designed to accommodate analog operations, and in most instances, relocating analog facilities on "in core" digital channels increases interference to surrounding analog and digital stations in both the UHF and VHF band, to the detriment of those station viewers. Indeed, the increased levels of interference has the ability to deprive television viewing households of the signals they depend upon for news, entertainment, and sports programming.

Sub-section 6(a) specifically prohibits the FCC from granting waivers to its spacing requirements (as required by section 73.610 of the Commission's rules (and the table contained therein) (47 CFR 73.610)) and its interference rules (as required by sections 73.622 and 73.623 of such rules (47 CFR 73.622, 73.623),) for stations assigned to channels 52–69, that seek to operate an analog facility on a digitally assigned "in-core" channel (channel 2–51), if such waiver will result in any degradation in or loss of service, or an increased level of interference, to any television household, except as the Commission's rules would otherwise expressly permit, exclusive of any waivers previously granted.

Pursuant to sub-section 6(b), television stations assigned to channels 63, 64, 68 and 69, that are seeking to clear these channels in order to make such frequencies available for public safety purposes by moving their facilities into the core (channels 2–51) will be governed by the FCC's interference rules and policies, including the waiver process. Sub-section 6(b) should not be construed as relieving stations from the obligation to meet the FCC's traditional waiver requirements.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL J. KERSCHNER ON HIS FIFTIETH BIRTHDAY

HON. PAUL E. GILLMOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to an outstanding gentleman from Ohio's Fifth Congressional District. Mike Kerschner of Tiffin, Ohio, will celebrate a milestone fiftieth birthday on June 29, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, Mike is celebrating this monumental occasion with family and friends, all

His efforts to give back to the community have brought him a lifetime of both personal and professional achievement and satisfaction. Mike truly is a valued asset to the City of Tiffin.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute to Mike Kerschner. Our communities are served well by having such honorable and giving citizens, like Mike, who care about the well being and stability of their communities. We wish him the very best on this special occasion, and wish him many more years of good health and good fortune.

COMMENDING THE INDIANAPOLIS
URBAN LEAGUE AND THE LOCAL CHAPTER OF THE NATIONAL ACHIEVERS SOCIETY

HON. JULIA CARSON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Ms. CARSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to extend heartfelt congratulations to the Indianapolis Urban League and the local chapter of the National Achievers Society.

More than 350 outstanding high school students have been inducted into the Indianapolis Urban League's local chapter of the National Achievers Society (NAS). The first induction was held June 30, 2001. The induction was coordinated by the Indianapolis Urban League, along with Urban Leagues in other cities across the country and was a part of the National Urban League's Campaign for African-American Achievement, a community-based movement that embodied the values of academic achievement, social development and civic responsibility.

In Indiana, the Indianapolis Urban League was a part of (22) Urban League Affiliates chosen from (115) affiliates across the country to implement the Campaign for African-American Achievement. The League will receive a minimum of $500,000 over a five-year period to draw attention to and support for the urgent achievement and developmental challenges facing students in Marion County.

Students selected were high school juniors and seniors of color who have a GPA of 3.0

or higher and plan to pursue higher education. The Indianapolis Urban League encouraged youth, parents and all community members to participate in activities that highlighted educational success and achievement, and placed their names on a national registry nominating them for scholarships up to $10,000.

Today, the Indianapolis Urban League awarded $222,000 in scholarships to (24) students. The highest number awarded to any Urban League Affiliate in the country.

Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to ensure that the accomplishments of these students from my district are forever memorialized in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the United States of America. Let all who read these pages know that a very special group of people in Indianapolis, and across the country are "Spreading the Gospel that Achievement Matters."

THE MEDICARE RX DRUG BENEFIT AND DISCOUNT ACT

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today, I am proud to introduce the Medicare Rx Drug Benefit and Discount Act with JOHN DINGELL, the Dean of the House and Ranking Member of the Energy and Commerce Committee. Our Ranking Member on the Ways and Means Health Subcommittee, PETE STARK, has had a leadership role in the development of this legislation, as have so many other health care leaders in our caucus.

This legislation makes good on our promise to add affordable, comprehensive prescription drug coverage to Medicare.

The Democratic bill will look, smell, taste, and feel like any other Medicare benefit, because it is a Medicare benefit. Beneficiaries will not have to deal with an HMO or other private insurer.

Under this legislation, every beneficiary will be guaranteed a $25 monthly premium, $100 annual deductible, 20% co-insurance and $2000 out-of-pocket limit, no matter where they live.

We provide additional assistance for low-income beneficiaries. Those with incomes up to 150% of the poverty level ($13,290 for one person) will pay nothing. Those with incomes between 150-175% ($13,290-$15,505 for a single person) of poverty will pay premiums on a sliding scale.

The Medicare Rx Drug Benefit and Discount Act would: Lower prescription drug costs for all Americans, regardless of whether they participate in our plan; give all Medicare beneficiaries the option of a reasonably-priced guaranteed prescription benefit under Medicare; and ensure that senior citizens and people with disabilities receive coverage for the drug their doctor prescribes and not some substitute that an insurance company deems "equivalent."

Unlike the competing Republican legislation, our plan would never force seniors into an HMO or similar private plan in order to get a prescription drug benefit.

Republicans claim they are giving seniors a "Medicare" prescription drug benefit, but their legislation really provides subsidies to insurance plans and HMOs, not to beneficiaries. Republicans claim they are offering beneficiaries a certain level of coverage, but their legislation really leaves virtually all of the important decisions to the private insurance companies.

Under the GOP plan, private insurers will decide which drugs are covered and which are not. If your drug is not on the list, too bad. Millions of seniors will not be able to afford their prescriptions under the GOP plan. Under the GOP plan, private insurers can pick and choose which pharmacies to include in their networks. If your neighborhood pharmacy is not on the preferred list, you are out of luck.

The bottom line is that those who can buy insurance under the GOP plan may find their choice of pharmacies severely limited or that they cannot get coverage for the drugs prescribed by their doctor.

Many HMOs have unfairly limited health care in the past. That's what the Patients' Bill of Rights debate has been about. They've been unreliable partners in Medicare to date; just look at the problems in the Medicare+Choice program. And now the Republicans want to put them in charge of this medication benefit under their "privatization" model.

Republican leaders have never liked Medicare. Former Speaker Gingrich once said Medicare would "wither on the vine because we think people are voluntarily going to leave it." In 1995, DICK ARMEY called Medicare: "a program I would have no part of in a free world."

Their legislation—the so-called Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act—lays the ground work for them to make good on their desire to do away with the program. The Republican prescription drug plan is the first step towards privatizing Medicare.

It forces seniors to deal with private insurance companies instead of having the choice of getting prescriptions through Medicare. It includes a premium support demonstration program that could significantly raise the premiums of beneficiaries who wish to stay in traditional fee-for-service Medicare. And it creates a new agency to oversee the private plans that lacks authority to provide adequate oversight and disadvantages the agency currently responsible for administering Medicare.

In contrast, we base our plan—not on a flawed privatization model—but on the successful Medicare program. We offer a genuine Medicare plan, providing an affordable voluntary drug coverage to all American seniors through Medicare.

Under this legislation, no senior will ever have to choose between putting food on the table or paying the rent and the drugs they need.

This legislation also helps reduce the skyrocketing costs that seniors and other beneficiaries currently pay for prescription drugs by utilizing the collective bargaining power of Medicare's 40 million beneficiaries to guarantee lower drug prices. By closing some loopholes in current law that prevent or delay generic drugs from coming to market, this legislation also reduces drug prices for all Americans.

While our colleagues on the other side of the aisle are engaged in a cynical political exercise designed to bring themselves political cover, ours is serious legislation. It would bring senior citizens Medicare prescription drug coverage.

When President Harry Truman first proposed Medicare in his second term, a wide array of Republican forces were against him saying he could not do it. Truman said: "We may not make it [now], but someday we will." Eventually, Truman and other Medicare advocates succeeded. Harry and Bess Truman became the first Medicare enrollees in 1965.

The Republican leadership may prevent us from passing a true Medicare prescription drug benefit now, but they cannot stop us in the long run because that is what seniors and all Americans have said they really want.

As PETE STARK points out, prescription drug coverage is as essential to seniors' good health in the 21st century as coverage of doctor visits and hospital stays was in the 20th century.

We have also included in this bill provider payment reforms and increases that match or, in some important areas, exceed those in the Republican-crafted Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act.

If you want to see the real difference between Democrats and Republicans, look at prescription drug coverage. While Republicans protect the pharmaceutical industries' profits, the Democrats protect seniors from skyrocketing prescription drug costs. I urge my colleagues to look at the fine print, and to vote for this legislation when the opportunity arises.

INTRODUCTION OF MEDICARE RX BENEFIT AND DISCOUNT ACT

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my Democratic colleagues in introducing a real prescription drug benefit bill.

Unlike the bill introduced by our Republican colleagues, our bill can be simply explained, because it is built on a simple, known, and effective model—Medicare itself.

Just like seniors pay a voluntary premium for Part B medical costs such as doctor visits, our bill provides for a voluntary Part D drug premium of $25 per month. For that, the Government will pay 80% of drug costs after a $100 deductible. And no senior will have to pay more than $2,000 in costs per year.

These are real numbers, not estimates. The benefits and the $25 monthly premium are specified on page 1 of the bill. Unfortunately, there are no such guarantees in the Republican bill.

On top of that, we will be arming seniors with the most potent protection from soaring drug costs. Forty million seniors banded together under the buying power of Medicare, we can begin to use the necessary bargaining power to rein in high drug prices.

This is not price controls; it is competition and bargaining. We saw that the Government was effective in negotiating a competitive price for the prescription drug Cipro during the anthrax outbreak. Why shouldn't we do the same for other life saving drugs for seniors?

In contrast to our simple and effective prescription drug benefit, the Republican bill is a complex scheme that would make Rube Goldberg blush. In fact, it is not a drug benefit at all. It is a host of subsidies to private insurers in the hope that they will offer a drug-only benefit to seniors. Will they? Time and again they have told us no.

Why would the Republicans put forward such a model? Well, quite simply they have a larger agenda—they want to privatize all of Medicare, and this is just another step. That is the only reason why seniors are not even given a choice of getting the benefit through their traditional Medicare provider.

And why don't they endorse our plan? Our plan is simple; it is comprehensive; it is what seniors want. The Republicans have raised just one issue: they say it costs too much. Well, I can tell you that we can afford it. It is just a matter of priorities.

To put the costs in perspective, we are told that our bill may cost $500 billion dollars more than the Republican proposal over 10 years. Well, just a couple of weeks ago our Republican colleagues voted for a bill to make permanent the repeal of the estate tax on the wealthiest people in this country. In the second decade when that permanent repeal kicks in, it will cost the Treasury $750 billion.

So, yes, this bill may be expensive. Seniors will spend $1.8 trillion on prescription drugs over the next decade. That is expensive. But we can do something about it. It is a matter of choices.

Our prescription drug benefit has the strong support of organizations representing millions of seniors, such as the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, the Alliance for Retired Americans, the National Council on Aging, and AARP. They recognize our benefit is a good value for seniors.

The bill we are introducing today also includes provisions to shore up the Medicare fee-for-service system such as increased payments to hospitals, doctors, and nursing homes. Senior citizens and individuals with disabilities depend on Medicare fee-for-service and ensuring its continued viability has always been a priority for Democrats.

The Medicare Rx Benefit and Discount Act is a solid bill that provides a comprehensive, affordable, and much needed prescription drug benefit in Medicare. It also moves towards ensuring that seniors and those with disabilities can continue to count on the same high quality care from their providers as they receive today.

It is a good bill, and I hope my colleagues in the House will join us in supporting it.

EVERY CONFLICT DEMANDS DIFFICULT CHOICES

HON. MAC COLLINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, the following article appeared in the May 22, 2002 Griffin

Daily News, Griffin, Georgia. It was so moving that I felt the entire article should be read by every Member of Congress and I would like to submit it for the RECORD.

EVERY CONFLICT DEMANDS DIFFICULT CHOICES (By Philip Smith)

I will address a subject that has had a special meaning to me. It is called by some as "limited war." It gets started by a stronger country answering the call of a weaker country (or should I say government) to protect and shield it by limited involvement from outside intruders while it has time to organize a means to govern and protect itself. This start had a heavy meaning to this country in the early 1960s, especially on Aug. 5, 1964, when the first U.S. pilot was shot down and taken POW. The U.S. Veterans Administration declares this date as the beginning of the American Vietnam era.

War is born of failure—the failure of nations to resolve their differences diplomatically and peacefully. Furthermore, it is waged with tools of death and destruction so that man may live in peace.

We found out just what was defined and not defined by "limited war" over the next 8.5 years of the Vietnam War. That war, which we lost, ended Jan. 27, 1973. After this decade (now 25 years) to ponder lessons of Vietnam, we can realistically think about the use of force again. It is my purpose to try to show some areas which must not be forgotten and must be completely understood before we can think more clearly about potential future conflicts. It took 10 years after my return from Vietnam before I wanted to read and understand the history of the country and the lessons we learned from the whole war. I have read many books and articles, but I am by no means an expert. I am smart enough to know that experience is the best teacher. We can't let this experience go by without learning her lessons. They were too costly. These are my views, but they are shared by more than 95 percent of all the combat Vietnam vets I have talked with. There is Total War, Limited War and Unilateral in Action. With all the massive destructive power in all the countries of the world, total war is an absurdity, just plain suicide. Unilateral in action is just turning your back as your hear screams of your friends dying because you don't want to get involved. Limited war is between the Pierce Hawk and the coward dove. In any future conflict, or better yet before any future conflict, we need to make some hard choices about (1) what the particular situation requires; (2) what our final objectives are and (3) how valuable are these objectives to the U.S., i.e., is it strategically a necessity to the U.S.? Is it worth the blood of our young men? Is it necessary in the survival of this country? Then, we need to develop appropriate forces.

There are four major mistake areas of concern surrounding Vietnam. (1) Gradualism was a policy that did not work in South Vietnam. We thought that if we kept turning the screws tighter on the North, inflicting enough pain, they would stop their aggression on the South. The politicians felt constrained to this gradually, because of political pressure. We were afraid if we went too fast, the Chinese or Soviets would get directly involved, plus our own critics of the war back home denounced any escalations. Well, every time we tightened the screws, the North adapted to the pressure and was able to endure and build up. Our only deviation from gradualism was Operation Linebacker II, which was around-the-clock surgically precise bombing campaign of Hanoi, Haiphong and other North Vietnamese cities. In mid-December 1972, when the peace talks broke down, due again to the NVA not negotiating in good faith, President Nixon put the baseball bat to their heads and for the first time brought the North Vietnamese to their knees in Operation Linebacker II.

They signed readily in January to end the war. Linebacker II was a lesson on the use of force. In Vietnam, we pussy-footed around the military power and paid a high price for it. We fought much longer and escalated far higher than we had ever intended, and we lost. Think what might have happened if Linebacker II had been unleashed in 1965 and not 1972.

(2) Attrition and gradualism often are lumped together. Our ability to wear down an enemy whose history since B.C. had been to endure pain, ended ultimately in failure. Small powers can fight big powers in attrition wars and win. The pattern is the same: Initial public support, prolonged struggles without apparent result, decreasing public support, one battle that goes badly, a vote of no-confidence, then withdrawal. But, it is possible to fight a war of attrition if there is total war, mobilization and commitment in the initial public support phase, such as World War I or World War II.

(3) Rules of engagement. We fought within specific rules of engagement while the enemy pursued a total war. As a helicopter pilot, we could not fire on the enemy unless we were not only being fired on first, but only if we had the specific person or persons identified. "Charlie" could fire at us while standing among a group of working peasants or villagers, and we could not return fire. But, he would give a child from this village a live grenade to pull the pin out as he walked up to some G.I. or rode in a helicopter. There were geographical restrictions for us, but none for the enemy. Don't think these rules won't demoralize a soldier fast.

(4) The people. To win any war, the will of the people must identify with the will of the conflict. For a young man to leave home while watching his country protest his leaving to fight an unpopular war and to arrive into that country seeing people protest his being there and fighting in a war where he has "rules of engagement" but the enemy does not, it doesn't take him long to see the futility in that war.

The will of the (Vietnamese) people was not the will of the government, no matter how much military hardware they had. So, without this "will," the enemy could hide in the open all over the country because they were the people. Without this "will of a people" to fight for a change, a change could never survive, and it didn't.

Some of the veterans of World War II and the Korean War have asked what is so special about the Vietnam combat vet. They, too, went through war. War is the same through time; only the weapons change. The horrors and pains and ever-present nightmares of war are the same after all wars. So, why are we, the Vietnam combat veterans, having so much more of a problem after this war?

Two issues keep coming up in talking with Vietnam vets: We Lost; we were defeated. We knew we could have won if only allowed to fight a war that had final objectives and not been a political palm.

(1) To my friends that were lost and all the men who died or were wounded or maimed for life, what is there to show for this sacrifice? These men were some of the finest people to ever live, and they answered their country's call, for what? Not only did we who came home have to live with a losing cause, but we came home to some hostile people who called us child-killers and dope heads, the thanks from a grateful nation.

(2) The second issue was guilt, guilt of taking people and ruining their customs and form of life so they could wait on the U.S. dollar. Families were broken up, beautiful cities and shrines destroyed, a country which had one of the prettiest coastlines and mountains made to look like the moon with so many craters and sprayed so much that nothing would grow. Yes, this, then seeing a "no win situation," packed up and left only to see the South Vietnamese retreat in 1975. All the good and bad we had done for more than 10 years was gone in less than 10 days.

I have attempted this collection of views many times, but never have been able to get my thoughts or research completed or knew what to do with it after I had completed it until I talked to a grand lady, who is a retired teacher in North Carolina. She is a beautiful, well-educated person, who loves her country. This lady is special to me. Our eyes get watery when we speak to each other. One of the times I was shot down was in Laos along with three other helicopters, a gunship pilot friend of mine helped give us air cover until we could be extracted. He was shot down and killed. This friend of mine was her son. This tore her family apart. She asked the same question after the war: why? What was Fred's life for? What were all Freds' lives for? We can't let a Vietnam ever happen again. We must learn from our experience. We can't turn our heads on another future conflict without these questions answered before. We must demand answers from Washington. If the answers are yes to America's survival and the decision is to go, then the whole country must go for it immediately and completely or not at all.

This next one may be close, and it may have your sons or grandsons in it. If they have to die, we can't let them die in vain or live with guilt and humiliation the rest of their lives.

HONORING DR. JAMES E. CARNES

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. James E. Carnes, a constituent of mine who retired earlier this month after a distinguished career of service at the Sarnoff Corporation, the last eleven and a half years as President and CEO.

Dr. Carnes holds nine U.S. patents and is the author of more than 100 papers and presentations. He received the David Samoff Award for Outstanding Technical Achievement in 1981. He has made tremendous contributions to science, to Sarnoff and to our central New Jersey community.

Carnes earned his Ph.D. in electrical engineering from Princeton University and B.S. in engineering science from Pennsylvania State University, and served four years in the U.S. Navy.

Dr. Carnes began his career in 1969 when he joined RCA Laboratories as a member of the technical staff. In 1977, he transferred to RCA's Consumer Electronics Division, holding a variety of management positions, including

Vice President of Engineering. In 1987, when Sarnoff Carnes became a subsidiary of SRI International, Dr. Carnes was named Vice President of Consumer Electronics and Information Sciences Research.

In addition to serving on the board of directors of SRI International and Sarnoff, Carnes serves on the board of several emerging growth technology companies including Sensar, Inc., Sarif, Inc., Orchid Biocomputer and Sarnoff Digital Communications.

We in central New Jersey will miss Dr. Carnes and his steady leadership at Sarnoff. I hope that all of my colleagues in the House will join with me in wishing him every success in his future endeavors.

MEDICARE RX DRUG BENEFIT AND DISCOUNT ACT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, House Democrats keep our promise to introduce legislation creating a real Medicare prescription drug benefit.

The Medicare Prescription Drug Benefit and Discount Act is an entitlement that would guarantee affordable, comprehensive prescription drug coverage to all senior citizens and individuals with disabilities who are on Medicare. It also includes provider payment increases and reforms that meet or exceed, in selected areas, those included in the Republican-written Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act. But this debate is not about provider payments. It's about providing beneficiaries with needed prescription drug coverage.

The benefit in this legislation is simple. It has no gaps, and no gimmicks. Beneficiaries will pay a $25 monthly premium, have a $100 per year deductible, and 20% co-insurance up to a $2000 out-of-pocket limit. After a beneficiary spends $2000, the government pays for all other needed prescription drugs. Under this legislation, a beneficiary will never pay more than $2000 in a year, and most beneficiaries will pay far less. Beneficiaries whose incomes are under 150 percent of poverty will pay no premiums and no cost-sharing. Those with incomes between 150-175 percent of the poverty level will receive premium subsidies on a sliding scale basis and pay no cost-sharing.

These benefits will be guaranteed for every beneficiary, regardless of where they live. This legislation will reduce costs by using the market clout of 40 million beneficiaries to negotiate lower prices. It will also reduce costs for all Americans by closing loopholes in current law that allow pharmaceutical companies to game the patent system by preventing competition from equally effective, but lower cost, generic drugs.

The Medicare Prescription Drug Benefit and Discount Act guarantees the choices that matter. Under our plan, Medicare will pay toward the cost of every drug, not just those on which the private insurance company cut a special deal. And, under our plan, every pharmacy that is willing to play by the rules will be welcome to participate.

And, importantly, unlike the Republican plan, our plan will never force the elderly or disabled into an HMO or similar private plan in order to get a prescription drug benefit.

The prescription drug coverage in the Democratic bill will seem just like any other Medicare benefit, because it is a Medicare benefit.

Don't be fooled by Republican rhetoric. The motto of the Republican bill ought to be "caveat emptor"—let the buyer beware.

Their bill is little more than an attempt to privatize Medicare, while doling out hundreds of billions of dollars in Federal tax dollar giveaways to their friends in the insurance and pharmaceutical industries.

And, no matter which measure you use, beneficiaries will pay more and get less under the Republican plan.

Our legislation will not be cheap. But we don't think twice about the cost of covering doctor visits and hospital stays under Medicare today. I would argue that prescription drug coverage is as essential to good health care in the 21st century as physician and hospital care was in the 20th century when Medicare was created.

Make no mistake: The Republican bill is designed simply to provide political cover for Republican members, not prescription drug coverage for senior citizens and individuals with disabilities.

Our bill meets the needs of the 40 million Americans who depend on Medicare. That's why the leading beneficiary organizations support this legislation. I look forward to the debate. I urge my colleagues to join us in support of a real Medicare drug benefit. Vote "yes" on the Medicare Rx Drug Benefit and Discount Act.

RECOGNIZING THE TRICENTEN- NIAL OF ALLEN, MARYLAND

HON. WAYNE T. GILCREST

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. GILCREST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Village of Allen's 300th birthday. This Maryland community is located in the First Congressional District, which I have the distinct honor of representing. Established in 1702, I recognize this village for its longevity, and through that longevity, for influencing the unique flavor of Maryland's Eastern Shore.

Allen sits in Wicomico County, along Wicomico Creek. Central to its establishment was the Grist Mill, which was originally built and operated by the Brereton family. The mill was fully operational until 1919 when, after 217 years, it finally closed. The mill dam formed Passerdyke Pond, still a local landmark, and it was the spillway, or trap, that gave the settlement its first name. Trap eventually became Upper Trappe, then it was changed to Allen in 1882, named after a prominent resident at the time who was a storekeeper and served as postmaster.

With the mill and its location on the lower Eastern Shore, Allen developed into a considerable market during the 18th and 19th centuries. A post office helped give it status, along with the several general stores that have operated throughout its history and the introduction of the canning industry. And like most settlements on the Delmarva Peninsula, agriculture drove the local economy, and Allen residents have found fame over the years with strawberries, apple and peach orchards, tomatoes, and especially string beans.

The Asbury Methodist Church is another important Allen institution. Founded in 1829, the church helped Allen become one of the earliest free African American communities in the Somerset area of Delamara.

Of course, it is people, not buildings, that really form a community, and the people of Allen have been clearly successful in that regard. Without local family heroes—the Breretons, the Allens, the Pollitts, the Messicks, the Huffingtons, the Twilleys, the Polks, the Duttons, the Fileds, and the Malones, to name but a few—Allen surely couldn't have survived its 300 years.

The people of Allen not only helped to develop a thriving village, but also shared their talents with greater Maryland. From within Allen's boundaries have grown community and regional leaders, sports heroes, and successful business entrepreneurs; Allen's people have served Maryland for centuries. In fact, Allen's citizens began establishing and building a community before the birth of the United States.

Allen is a true American village. It represents community, tradition, heritage and permanence. Peppered with historic buildings, Allen's pride in its history is evident, a history I honor today. Allen, however, is much more than its history; it is a thriving residential village with strong leadership and an active community. Contributing to the strength of Allen's community spirit are the Lion's Club, a Volunteer Fire Company, the Historical Society and the Asbury and Friendship United Methodist Churches. These organizations preserve history while moving Allen forward into its third century.

Allen is certainly one of Maryland's hidden treasures, so please join me in recognizing and celebrating the history of Maryland's charming Village of Allen in this, its 300th year.

AARON FOUNDATION

HON. JERROLD NADLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Moses and Aaron Foundation for its commitment to special children and their families. I recognize with gratitude the Foundation's significant and enduring humanitarian efforts and applaud all those who have given of themselves to fulfill its mission.

The Moses and Aaron Foundation "Special Fund for Children" is dedicated to assisting children with disabilities and their families with a wide range of programs including social, physical, financial and wheelchair assistance, as well as counseling and guidance.

It also provides scholarship funding to educational institutions, collects, purchases, and distributes clothing for children in need, and remembers them with presents at holiday time or when they are hospitalized. This past year, the Foundation provided hundred of toys to the children of New York City's Police and Fire Department's fallen heroes.

In cooperation with Bally Fitness Centers and under the direction of its President Rabbi Yaacov Kaploun, and Executive Vice President Yehuda Kaploun, the Foundation has been able to establish 22 physical fitness and therapy centers and has arranged for sound and musical equipment in other institutions.

In conjunction with Downtown Film Productions, The Moses and Aaron Foundation produced "Chazak—A Testament of Strength", an award winning documentary highlighting the effect of music on special children. This monumental documentary serves as a vehicle to sensitize and educate the entire community on the needs of its special and outstanding citizens.

On Saturday night, July 20, 2002 at the Monticello Raceway in Monticello, New York, the Moses and Aaron Foundation under the Honorary Chairmanship of Nobel Laureate Eli Weisel, will sponsor its sixth Summer "Chazak—Strength" Concert paying tribute to special children. The guests of honor will be the special children, some of whom will perform with the entertainers on stage. A tribute will also be held in memory of the fallen heroes of the September 11th attack on the World Trade Center.

The corporate and individual sponsors of the Moses and Aaron Foundation include Mr. David Buntzman, Mr. Jonathan Fleisig, Mr. Robert Gans, Mrs. Richard Gans, Mr. Avi and Dr. Laura Greenbaum, Mr. and Mrs. David Hirsch, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Rennert, Mr. Charles Rosenay, Dr. Steven Stowe, and Mr. Eli Rothman. I recognize the late Phyllis Cohen for her support of the Foundation, contributing to the improvement in the quality of life of special children.

I also recognize the support given to the Moses and Aaron Foundation by Steve and Shirley Slesinger, who have brought happiness and smiles to the faces of millions of America's youth by bringing Winnie the Pooh and other characters to the screen and printed world, with particular credit to Shirley

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Slesinger Lasswell for creating and cultivating one of the best loved bear in history.

The Moses and Aaron Foundation was founded in memory of Rabbi Dr. Maurice I. Hecht and Aaron Kaploun, both of whom led lives of exemplary community service. It is in this sentiment of communal dedication that the Moses and Aaron Foundation has devoted itself to serving the needs of a unique group in the community.

I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring the Moses and Aaron Foundation. Their work has truly made a difference in the lives of thousands.

PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA AND MATSUYAMA, JAPAN

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, for over twenty years the City of Sacramento, California and Matsuyama, Japan have shared a special relationship as sister cities. This partnership has given birth to cultural exchanges that have enriched the lives of the residents in both cities. A new art exhibition that will be unveiled on July 6, 2002, is a testimony to this ongoing relationship.

The Miura Museum of Art in Matsuyama will unveil the "Serene Beauty: Lucie Rie Retrospective" exhibit to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the artist's birth. The exhibit features the work of Lucie Rie, one of the most outstanding potters of the 20th century and a major influence on the world of ceramic art. The exhibit of Lucie Rie's exceptional ceramic work at the Miura Museum of Art in Matsuyama is only the second showing of her work in Japan.

This exhibit would have not been possible without the partnership with Sacramento residents who loaned the museum a large portion of the exhibit that will be displayed. Additionally, the museum has invited residents of Sacramento to participate in the exhibit opening and panel discussion honoring Lucie Rie and her passion for creating ceramic art.

I would like to commend each of participants who have loaned pieces from their collection in order to share their appreciation of art with the residents of Japan. The sister city partnership has developed into a friendship which complements the diverse background of the residents of Sacramento and Matsuyama and I look forward to the continued exchange of cultural treasures between our two cities.

HONORING RUFINA A.
HERNANDEZ, ESQ.

HON. DIANA DeGETTE

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Ms. DeGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the splendid efforts and notable accomplishments of an extraordinary woman in the 1st Congressional District of Colorado. It is both fitting and proper that we recognize this outstanding community leader for her exceptional record of civic leadership and invaluable service. It is to commend this outstanding citizen that I rise to honor Rufina A. Hernandez, Esq.

Ms. Hernandez has amassed a distinguished record of leadership and service to our community. She received her Bachelor of Arts Degree in Political Science from the University of New Mexico and her Juris Doctorate from the Georgetown University Law Center. Ms. Hernandez practiced law for eight years at the Legal Aid Society of Denver specializing in Family Law, Public Utility Regulation and Consumer Protection. She served as the Executive Director of the State Bar of New Mexico and was previously the Assistant Dean for Student Affairs at the University of Denver College of Law.

Presently, Ms. Hernandez is the Executive Director of the Latin American Research and Service Agency (LARASA), a preeminent community based non-profit organization dedicated to improving the health, education and self sufficiency of Colorado's Latino community. Under her leadership, LARASA has made a tremendous impact on our city and state by increasing awareness about issues affecting the Latino community and developing effective public policies and programs to address those issues. Ms. Hernandez has been a powerful advocate for change. Through her leadership, LARASA continues to bring tangible benefits to our community through the Center for Community and Behavioral Health, Centro de la Familia—the Latino Public Policy Center, the Data Resource Center and through the Proyecto Educar and Amigos de la Comunidad programs that increase cultural competency and Latino involvement in our schools.

Ms. Hernandez serves on the National Center for Law and Education Board of Directors, the Women's Lobby Board, the Colorado Association of Non Profit Organizations, the Child Health Advocates Board of Directors and the Governor's Utility Consumer Advisory Board. She co-chairs the Latino Jewish Coalition and the Latino Campaign for Education and also serves on the Mayor's Latino Advisory Council.

It comes as no surprise that Ms. Hernandez' commitment and service has earned her several awards including the American Jewish Committee Professional Award, the National Council of LARASA Special Advocacy Award, the American Jurisprudence Award for Academic Achievement, and the University of Denver Outstanding Staff Award.

While we are saddened that Ms. Hernandez will be leaving our community for a position with the National Education Association, I am confident that her leadership, skill and experience will be of great benefit to the cause of public education in our country.

Please join me in commending Rufina Hernandez, Esq. It is the strong leadership she exhibits on a daily basis that continually enhances our lives and builds a better future for all Americans.

CELEBRATING THE 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF TONY AND MURIEL MANSOUR

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor two dear friends, Tony and Muriel Mansour, who will join with family and friends this Saturday, June 29th to celebrate their fifty years of marriage. My wife, Gayle, and I want to add our congratulations to Tony and Muriel on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary.

I have known the Mansour family since I was growing up on the east side of Flint, Michigan. The Mansour's lived one street over from the Kildee's, and the Mansour and Kildee children played together.

Mr. Speaker, both Tony and Muriel have been active members of our community in the City of Flint and Genesee County for many years. Tony was a distinguished attorney for many years before being elected Genesee County Circuit Judge in 1968. He served with great distinction until he retired from the bench. In addition to resuming his successful law practice, Tony has been active in the Flint Rotary Club, being elected Club President in 1996. Tony is a past President of the Men's Club at Flint Holy Rosary Catholic Church and of the Knights of Columbus in Davison, Michigan. Tony has also been a leader in Flint's large and diverse Arab-American community, helping to found the Arab-American Heritage Council.

Muriel has been active in her own right. She has served as president of Heartbeat of Flint, as well as president of the Flint chapter of the American Business Women's Association. Muriel has also served on numerous community organization boards including the Children's Museum of Flint, the Catholic Social Services, the Genesee County Bar Auxiliary, the Flint Osteopathic Hospital Auxiliary, and Allegro (the volunteers for the Flint Institute of Music). For the past eight years, Muriel has worked as a volunteer at the Genesee-Lapeer Chapter of the Red Cross.

Mr. Speaker, the City of Flint and Genesee County is a much better place in which to live due to the efforts of Tony and Muriel Mansour. Gayle and I value them as dear friends and wish them well on the occasion of their golden wedding anniversary.

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT WUSSLER
FOR 19 YEARS OF SERVICE WITH THE RED CROSS

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to commend Robert Wussler for his 19 years of public service with the San Bernardino County Chapter of the American Red Cross. Under his leadership, the Red Cross chapter has quadrupled its budget and modernized its efforts to better serve the citizens of the Inland Empire.

Mr. Wussler began his tenure in 1983 as the accountant for the chapter in San Bernardino County, which is the main population center of my home district. After serving in that capacity for seven years, he became the chief executive officer of the newly created Inland Empire Chapter in 1990.

Since that time, the chapter has grown its budget from $300,000 to more than $1.2 million, and increased its staff from seven to 15 professional employees. At the same time, he has reduced the chapter's dependency on United Way funding from 83 percent in the 1980s to 5 percent today. The chapter is now computerized, centralized and very well organized, thanks to Mr. Wussler's efforts. It recently received a $1 million gift from a special donor.

The improvement of the San Bernardino Chapter under Mr. Wussler's direction was recognized by the American Red Cross headquarters. Two decades ago, the chapter was considered near the bottom among chapters across the country. It is now ranked among the 100 best of 1,125 nationally. Mr. Wussler himself received the 1997 Golden Bear Award for Management from the State of California, and the National Tiffany Award, the highest granted to Red Cross paid staff.

Mr. Wussler and the chapter's board of directors in 1994 created the National Nurse Assistant Training program, which is gratefully supported by local hospitals and trains and certifies 200 students a year as nursing assistants. The chapter has also implemented a home health care training program and an acute care program to help nurse assistants further their career.

Most important to the citizens of San Bernardino County, the Red Cross has been a lifeline for thousands of people who have lost their homes or seen their lives thrown into turmoil by disasters like the Big Bear and Landers Earthquakes of 1993 and the terrible floods that wiped out communities from Forest Glen to Mentone in 1999. The chapter has also helped in countless small disasters that have thrown individual families from their homes, and helped in planning for the disasters we will face in the future.

Mr. Speaker, after 19 years with the San Bernardino Chapter, Robert Wussler has decided to retire. I ask you and my colleagues to please join me in thanking him for a career dedicated to public service and aiding the afflicted, and wish him well in his future endeavors.

MEETING WITH CROWN PRINCE ABDULLAH

HON. ROBERT WEXLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. WEXLER. Mr. Speaker, this week I will travel to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to meet with Crown Prince Abdullah and other Saudi officials for the third time since the horrific terrorist attacks of September 11. As a result of my previous visits, I have become convinced that it is in the best interest of the United States to remain actively engaged in a constructive dialogue and working partnership with Saudi officials and their leader Crown Prince Abdullah.

My initial reaction to traveling thousands of miles to the Saudi Kingdom, in early October 2001, where 15 out of 19 hijackers as well as Osama bin Laden hailed from, was negative. I saw little value in traveling to a region where even in the wake of over 3,000 American deaths, there remained an undeniable hatred of America, continued financial support for fervent extremism, and ties to terrorist organizations that threaten our nation's interest and security. However, I have changed my initial reluctance to engage Saudi Arabia, though not my objection to many of its policies, because Saudi Arabia lies not only at the heart of the problem facing the United States in the Middle East and the Islamic world, but they are also our best hope for resolving these same problems.

My meetings with Crown Prince Abdullah in Riyadh and Jeddah have been candid and frank discussions regarding many aspects of U.S.-Saudi bilateral relations. No subject has been taboo. The Crown Prince and I both voiced criticism of each others country's policies, but we also reiterated the longstanding friendship and alliance between America and Saudi Arabia and our many common interests and goals.

The Crown Prince impresses me as a man with a vision of peace and coexistence between Israelis and Arabs; moreover, he is willing to risk his personal prestige for a quest for peace. The Crown Prince is a practical and logical man. He is tested and knows the value of leadership. I am convinced that the Crown Prince senses an historic opportunity to build confidence and seek peace from the extraordinary tragedies of the last 20 months and appreciates this opportunity to lead the Arab world away from extreme radicalism and toward normalizing relations with Israel.

My optimism is checked, however, by a recurrent fundamental failure by Saudi Arabia to appreciate the history of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict from an Israeli perspective and to recognize the sense of vulnerability of the Israeli people. In fact, the Crown Prince often suggests that American policy in the Middle East is unbalanced and too favorable to Israel. Ironically, it is the Saudi policy toward Israel that too often lacks objectivity.

Since September 11, there has been much criticism of the Saudi government in our country and internationally. Much of the criticism is justified, and I have joined my colleagues in Congress in voicing my concerns and objections when I deemed it necessary and in the best interest of the nation. I have been a vocal critic of harmful policies carried out by the Saudi government or Saudi nationals, including their lack of democracy, freedom of the press and abominable treatment of women. I have also strongly condemned Saudi connections to the financing and support of international terrorist organizations, unwillingness to unequivocally condemn suicide bombings perpetrated by Palestinian terrorists, financial payoffs to the families of Palestinian suicide bombers, and their financial backing of extremist schools in Pakistan and around the world that preach intolerance and hate. Like many Americans, I am also angered and disturbed by the virulent anti-American and anti-Semitic rhetoric that is published in the government-run press and echoed repeatedly by Saudis throughout the kingdom. The Saudi government cannot have it both ways; if they are truly committed to peaceful coexistence with Israel, they cannot feed the fires of those who hate and are bent on the destruction of the peace process and the State of Israel itself.

Faced with growing American and international criticism, Crown Prince Abdullah has reevaluated the effect of Saudi policies and is seeking to make fundamental changes in the Saudi Kingdom. Since assuming leadership in 1995, Crown Prince Abdullah has taken initial steps to reform Saudi Arabia's economic and political structure and is making serious attempts to root out corruption. The Crown Prince is also the leading advocate for Saudi Arabia's obtaining membership in the World Trade Organization, WTO. I strongly support this effort and believe that WTO membership would lead to greater accountability and transparency in the Saudi Kingdom and, more importantly, would connect Saudis to the global economy.

Most important of all, Crown Prince Abdullah brought Saudi Arabia into the international spotlight last February by initiating a proposal that offers Arab normalization of relations with the State of Israel, if Israel returns to the pre-1967 borders. While the Saudi plan maybe viewed by some as a non-starter, an initial position for negotiations, or even worse a public relations ploy, it should not be altogether ignored or minimized. This initiative is a significant signal that Crown Prince Abdullah will be an active participant in the elusive peace process and may be the most progressive step toward Arab-Israeli reconciliation taken by any Arab leader since Egyptian President Anwar al-Sadat traveled to Jerusalem and King Hussein of Jordan signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1994. Unfortunately, during Camp David II in 2000, too many Arab leaders remained on the sidelines while a comprehensive peace proposal was being circulated. Crown Prince Abdullah seems to recognize the lost opportunity that occurred during Camp David II, and in a promising sign he clearly stated to me his intention to be actively involved in any new effort for a comprehensive peace agreement.

The United States would be ill-advised to disengage from Saudi Arabia or its leader. As the heart and soul of the Muslim world, Saudi Arabia is home to Islam's two holiest places, Mecca and Medina. It is the Muslim world and, in particular, Arab states that the United States must actively engage in dialogue to promote educational reform, greater religious freedom, democracy, freedom of the press and expanded rights for women. We need to press the Saudi government, especially Crown Prince Abdullah who has significant weight in the Arab and Islamic world, to address religious freedom and human rights. At the same time, we must seek the advice and assistance of prominent Saudis to help America strengthen and improve our standing in the Muslim world. It would be short-sighted to ignore the perceptions and beliefs of more than one billion people.

Saudi Arabia is also integral to our policy of containing and eventually removing Saddam Hussein from power. Saudi cooperation with the U.S. and other allies in enforcing Operation Southern Watch over Southern Iraq has been considerable. During my visit to Saudi Arabia this week, I will reiterate that Iraq repeatedly fails to comply with United Nations (UN) resolutions, continues to block unfettered UN weapons inspections, is stockpiling weapons of mass destruction, harbors and supports terrorists, and poses a grave threat to the security of the United States and every nation in the region. It is critical to the United States that Crown Prince Abdullah and Saudi Arabia assist the Bush Administration in building a coalition of support to remove the threat of Saddam Hussein to the region.

My visit to Saudi Arabia is also another opportunity to send a message from the American people to the Saudi government and its citizens that the United States intends on continuing our engagement and partnership with their country; however, I would be remiss if I ignored the continued presence and activity of dangerous extremists in the Saudi Kingdom and the danger they pose to America and our allies. Ultimately, the future of U.S.-Saudi relations hinge on the efforts of Saudi leaders to root out extremist elements within the kingdom and choke off all financial support emanating from the kingdom to terrorist organizations around the world.

As for Saudi Arabia's leading role in the Middle East, it is incumbent on Crown Prince Abdullah and other Arab leaders to help reform the Palestinian leadership, as outlined by President Bush on June 24, 2002, from one based on corruption, incitement, terror and suicide bombings to one based on democracy, peace and constructive dialogue. This will be the major thrust of my conversations with the Crown Prince this Sunday in Jeddah. It is important to note that Crown Prince Abdullah and other Saudi officials have already played a constructive role in the reform effort by assisting the Palestinians in writing a new constitution. Without concerted international pressure, there will be no genuine reform of the Palestinian leadership and, I fear, no end to suicide bombings. These terrorist acts must end if we are to reach a comprehensive and lasting regional peace based on security, recognition for Israel, and statehood for the Palestinians. Indeed, the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people to have a nation of their own will be destroyed unless there is a change of attitude among those in the Arab and Muslim worlds who encourage and provide moral, financial and material support to so-called martyrs who commit these heinous, inhuman and immoral terrorist acts.

As a strong supporter of an unbreakable bond between the United States and Israel, I care deeply about the future security and prosperity of the Jewish homeland. In meetings with Saudi leaders, I will remind them of the unprecedented terrorism the Israeli people have faced over the past 20 months and the tragic toll that suicide bombers have inflicted on innocent Israelis. It is also imperative they understand that like America, Israel has the right to defend herself against these barbaric attacks and that the United States will stand in solidarity with Israel during this difficult time.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to avert another tragedy like September 11 and defeat the scourge of terrorism, America needs allies—we cannot do it alone. I am going to Saudi Arabia because more effective cooperation and understanding between our two countries is fundamental to winning the international war on terrorism, and members of Congress must play more than just a consenting role in that effort.

PUBLIC SAFETY TAX CUT ACT

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Public Safety Tax Cut Act. This legislation will achieve two important public policy goals.

First, it will effectively overturn a ruling of the Internal Revenue Service which has declared as taxable income the waiving of fees by local governments who provide service for public safety volunteers.

Many local governments use volunteer firefighters and auxiliary police either in place of, or as a supplement to, their public safety professionals. Often as an incentive to would-be volunteers, the local entities might waive all or a portion of the fees typically charged for city services such as the provision of drinking water, sewerage charges, or debris pick up. Local entities make these decisions for the purpose of encouraging folks to volunteer, and seldom do these benefits come anywhere near the level of a true compensation for the many hours of training and service required of the volunteers. This, of course, not even to mention the fact that these volunteers could very possibly be called into a situation where they may have to put their lives on the line.

Rather than encouraging this type of volunteerism, which is so crucial, particularly to America's rural communities, the IRS has decided that the provision of the benefits described above amount to taxable income. Not only does this adversely affect the financial position of the volunteer by foisting new taxes about him or her, it has in fact led local entities to stop providing these benefits, thus taking away a key tool they have used to recruit volunteers. That is why the IRS ruling in this instance has a substantial deleterious impact on the spirit of American volunteerism. How far could this go? For example, would consistent application mean that a local Salvation Army volunteer be taxed for the value of a complimentary ticket to that organization's annual county dinner? This is obviously bad policy.

This legislation would rectify this situation by specifically exempting these types of benefits from federal taxation.

Next, this legislation would also provide paid professional police and fire officers with a $1,000 per year tax credit. These professional public safety officers put their lives on the line each and every day, and I think we all agree that there is no way to properly compensate them for the fabulous services they provide. In America we have a tradition of local law enforcement and public safety provision. So, while it is not the role of our federal government to increase the salaries of these, it certainly is within our authority to increase their take-home pay by reducing the amount of money that we take from their pockets via federal taxation, and that is something this bill specifically does as well.

President George Bush has called on Americans to volunteer their time and energy to enhancing public safety. Shouldn't Congress do its part by reducing taxes that discourage public safety volunteerism? Shouldn't Congress also show its appreciation to police officers and fire fighters by reducing their taxes? I believe the answer to both of these questions is a resounding "Yes" and therefore I am proud to introduce the Public Safety Tax Cut Act. I request that my fellow Members join in support of this key legislation.

IN HONOR OF HEROES WHO HAVE FOUGHT FOR OUR COUNTRY

HON. ALBERT RUSSELL WYNN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, as we approach Independence Day, I submit for the RECORD a speech given in my Congressional District on Memorial Day, by James E. Merna of 7503 Dover Lane, Lanham, Maryland, honoring the heroism of veterans from Prince George's County, Maryland, that have fought to protect our freedoms.

HONORING FIVE SONS OF PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY, MARYLAND, THAT HAVE FOUGHT TO PROTECT OUR FREEDOMS

(By James E. Merna, Former Maryland State Commandant, Marine Corps League)

Thank you Mayor Harrington, Councilwoman Marion Hoffman, Bill Hickey, other Town of Bladensburg elected and appointed officials, members of American Legion Post 131, leaders of other veterans organizations, and fellow veterans. Thank you for inviting me. I am pleased to be here.

The town and citizens of Bladensburg should take great pride for the many years you have conducted ceremonies such as this. Bladensburg is not only a historic town—a famous port town—it is also a very patriotic town. Thanks also to Colmar Manor American Legion Post 131 for helping to make these events happen.

Memorial Day, as it is now observed, is a special day set aside to remember the service and sacrifice made by Americans who answered their country's call to duty in all wars—those who gave their lives, those who served and returned, those who were injured or disabled as a result of their service those who remain missing in action, and those who serve today in Afghanistan and around the world to defend freedom and to fight terrorism.

In my remarks today, I want to talk about five brave Sons of Prince George's County, who answered their nation's call, and of their courage, devotion to duty, and personal sacrifice. I believe it is a message for all, but especially for our young people, Better role model other than their parents or close relatives, they could not have.

I stress younger people in light of an announcement from the U.S. Department of Education this month that said "More than half of America's high school seniors do not have even the most basic grasp of U.S. history, showing no improvement in a nationwide test since 1994."

The Education Department issued a national history "report card" which measured the performance last year of fourth, eighth and 12th graders in history. Students did not know, for instance, that America's fundamental belief in individual liberty was expressed in the Declaration of Independence, or that the image of UNCLE SAM was used to appeal to patriotism during wartime.

Educators said the results were "truly abysmal," pointing out that the higher the grade and closer a student was to voting age, the lower the understanding of U.S. history.

In grade 12, only 43 percent of students had a basic or proficient knowledge of history. More than a third of fourth graders and nearly 40 percent of eighth graders also did not have a basic understanding of the subject. The Secretary of Education, Rod Paige, stressed that "basic" is the bottom of the achievement ladder. And, he said, they didn't even reach that—"the lowest rung."

In this complex day and age, this is troublesome. History is a key component of our nation's school curriculum, and it is through history that we understand our past and contemplate our future. Especially following the September 11 attacks that targeted U.S. democracy. It is appalling that some of the questions that stumped students involved the most fundamental concepts of America's democracy. Our work is cut out for us—we need more enlightened students—and better trained history teachers.

The first notable Son of Prince George's County that I want to mention, is one of your very own, a life-long resident of Bladensburg. When I think of him, I'm reminded of the many great songs that were popular during World War II. And I'm referring to records, not CD's, tapes, or DVD's. Among the best in my opinion, were three: (1) There'll be Bluebirds Over, the White Cliffs of Dover," sung by Vera Lynn (2) "Long Ago and Far Away," made famous by Jo Stafford, and (3) "When the Lights Go On Again, All Over the World," sung by Vaughn Monroe.

This individual, I am about to name, and many others of his generation exemplified the very ideals inscribed at the base of this Peace Cross Memorial: endurance, courage, devotion, and valor. Because of their wartime service and sacrifice, they made it possible for the bluebirds once again to fly over the White Cliffs of Dover, for the lights to come on again all over the world, in a global struggle long ago and far away.

Ladies and gentlemen, I ask you to join with me in applause for one of your finest citizens, a World War II Navy veteran of many battles in the Pacific, a venerable gentleman who will celebrate his 88th birthday in August, the Chairman-Emeritus of Bladensburg's Promotions Committee—Mr. Bill Hickey.

Let us never forget that we have yet to erect a Memorial on the Mall in Washington for our World War II veterans, and we're losing these veterans at an astounding rate of 1500 a day. Like all of you, I want to see that overdue Memorial built—and soon, as a tribute to the Bill Hickey's and all our World War II veterans. I have a personal interest in this Memorial as well. My oldest brother George was killed in action in World War II. He went down with his ship, LST 577, sunk by a torpedo from a Japanese submarine in the Philippines, on February 11, 1945. He was 19 years old

Let me mention another truly outstanding Son of Prince George's County—one who epitomized the motto of those long ago great Notre Dame football teams coached by the legendary Knute Rockne. Coach Rockne once said the motto of his teams was: Don't Let Your Buddy Down—a motto which he admitted he borrowed from our Marine Corps on the battlefields of World War I.

Captain Jim Graham grew up in Prince George's County, in Accokeek, finished high school in Brandywine, and graduated from Frostburg State College in 1963. His family later lived in Forestville. He was a career Marine officer serving in Vietnam in 1967. Listen to this stirring account of Captain Graham's heroic actions as described by General Lewis W. Walt, former Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps: "Captain Jim Graham was a young company commander serving with our 5th Marine Regiment in Vietnam. His company, while in the attack, came under heavy fire from mortars and small arms which immediately inflicted large numbers of casualties in his Second Platoon. Graham, upon seeing this, organized and boldly led a fierce assault through the Second Platoon's position, forcing the enemy to abandon the machine gun position, thereby relieving some of the pressure on the platoon and enabling evacuation of the wounded to a more secure area. During the afternoon and early evening, Graham's small force stood steadfast in its hard-won enclave. He was wounded twice while personally accounting for 15 enemies killed. His battalion commander ordered him to withdraw to friendly lines. Graham reacted by sending all of his men back except one man who could not be moved due to the seriousness of his wounds. He apologized to his battalion commander for not completely carrying out the order to withdraw, but said "I just can't leave this young Marine, keep the firing coming through Colonel, we are hurting them." About 20 minutes later, Captain Graham radioed: "This is my last transmission. I am being assaulted by at least 25 of them. It's been a pleasure soldiering with you." Captain Jim Graham was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor for his heroic deeds that day."

A year later, I had the privilege to attend a ceremony at 8th and I, Marine Barracks, Washington, DC when Captain Graham's widow, Janice, accepted the Nation's highest award, the Congressional Medal of Honor, in her husband's name. It was the first Medal of Honor to be awarded to a Marylander in the Vietnam War.

Another Prince George's great, the late Maryland State Senator Ed Conroy, was a highly decorated army Korean War hero who led the defense of Heartbreak Ridge. He was severely wounded twice, lost an arm and sustained burns over 90 percent of his body. Among his decorations were the Silver Star, and two Purple Hearts. Ed had a miraculous recovery and went on to earn a law degree from Georgetown University. He never forgot his fellow veterans and was known in the Maryland Senate as the champion legislator for all veterans legislation. I had the pleasure to organize a testimonial dinner for Ed when he was elected as National Commander of the Disabled American Veterans. On many occasions when I would introduce him, he would have me say with pride that he was "the closest to a Marine without being a Marine." We miss Ed and his tireless energy. A great patriot. Many of you, I'm sure, know Ed's widow, Mary Conroy. She serves Prince George's County today with much distinction, as a Member of the House of Delegates in Annapolis.

Moving along, I want to mention two other notable Sons of Prince George's County who served their nation with honor in Vietnam: Charles E. "Butch" Joeckel, Jr., and John Clements, both distinguished combat Marines.

Butch Jeckel was raised in Colmar Manor, within walking distance of this monument. He graduated from Bladensburg High School in 1965, joined the Marines in 1966, and went to Vietnam in 1967. He was a 20-year-old squad leader and only in Vietnam three months when his river boat was ambushed during the Tet Offensive in January 1968. While searching out a suspected enemy position ashore, one of his men inadvertently stepped on a land mine, triggering an explosion which blew off both of Butch's legs above the knee. Seven other Marines were wounded by the blast. Despite his severe injuries, Butch maintained exceptional presence of mind and called for a medical evacuation and directed the clearing of a helicopter landing zone.

As is the case with all seriously wounded servicemen and those killed in action, a military officer is usually assigned to make personal contact with the family. The casualty notification officers, as they are called, was in Butch's case, a Marine Lieutenant just back from Vietnam. It was my brother, Jerry Merna. When Jerry got back home that night, in Alexandria, Va., he called to let me know he had just been in Colmar Manor, visiting with Butch's parents. He let me know of the severity of Butch's wounds.

For me, that was the beginning of a 34-year friendship, to this day, with Butch. I soon rounded up a few other former Marines and we visited Butch at the Philadelphia Naval Hospital. In fact, we brought him home once he was discharged, back to his boyhood home—at 3605 40th Place, in Colmar Manor, where his dad, a World War II veteran, still lives. On the way home, we made a detour, to Peter Connell's Restaurant on Annapolis Road, now called The Italian Inn, for "refreshments."

I was with Butch at a ceremony at Headquarters Marine Corps when he was awarded the Silver Star, the nation's third highest award for bravery in combat. It was presented to him by four-star General Lewis W. Walt, Assistant Commandant of the Marine Corps. Earlier, in the Korean War, General Walt was my Commanding Officer, when he commanded the 5th Marine Regiment, First Marine Division. When pinning the medal on Butch, General Walt said, "This is one of the proudest moments of my military career, for I am more proud of Butch than of any Marine I know." That was quite a compliment coming from someone like General Walt, who during his military career, won two Navy Crosses and the Silver Star in World War II, the Legion of Merit, and the Bronze Star in Korea, and the Distinguished Service Medal as the Commander of Marines in Vietnam.

This was not the first meeting Butch had with General Walt. Back on July 6, 1968, thirty-four years ago, I had the pleasure of organizing a Welcome Home Parade for Butch. The parade commenced right here at this very site, the Peace Cross, and marched all the way down Bladensburg Road to the DC line. My Prince George's County Detachment of the Marine Corps League and the American Legion Post 131 in Colmar Manor, co-chaired the event. We had the county proclaim that day, July 6, 1968, as Butch Joeckel Day. Youth groups, veterans groups, community service organizations, high school marching bands, the Marine Corps Band, and troops from each of the military services marched proudly in Butch's honor that day. The grand marshal of the parade was General Walt, just back from Vietnam himself. Admittedly, and unfortunately, there weren't many parades for returning Vietnam Veterans in those days, but we had one, right here in Prince George's County. It was a huge success, and was nationally televised by ABC-TV.

One last word about Butch. He went on to a very distinguished career. He earned his college degree, then decided he wanted to help his fellow veterans. He took a low-level position in the Washington office of the Disabled American Veterans, and then went on to head up not only the Washington office, but the entire national organization itself, with more than one million members strong. He lives in Annapolis now, is married with two grown children, and is a grandfather. He's currently serving on a presidential disability commission. But he's never forgotten his roots. In an interview with the Capital newspaper in Annapolis not too long ago, he said, "I've been working in veterans affairs since I came back in 1968. It's in my heart. I felt like I had to give back to my community because they were great to me. I got a welcome home parade in my hometown. Not many did."

Finally, a word about John Clements. John was raised in Cheverly, and graduated from DeMatha High School. John was a contemporary of Butch's, and like Butch, joined the Marines right out of high school. He went off to Vietnam where he won three Purple Hearts. He was seriously wounded and spent a long time hospitalized. I visited John at Bethesda Naval Hospital a number of times. The doctors wanted to amputate one of John's legs, but through perseverance and much prayer, he was able to convince them otherwise. John has gotten by since then with the use of a cane. Like Butch, John too wanted to help his fellow veterans, and went on to a successful career with the Veterans Administration designing prosthetic equipment for disabled veterans.

In closing, as we leave here today, let us affirm to remember Memorial Day for what it was intended to be—a day of recognition, honor, and respect, and not just a three-day holiday.

Let us remember our fallen comrades—those who fought and died for freedom, and the children, spouses and parents they left behind. Let us never forget those who returned, many disabled. If we can remember these worthy veterans on Memorial Day, we ought to honor them on Election Day. Let's do all in our power to put more upcoming Ed Conroy's in City Hall, on the County Council, in our State House, and in the Congress. We have the opportunity to do so with elections coming up in the Fall. They served us so well in war—and they would do as well in preserving the peace.

Our very own heroes—Bill Hickey in World War II, Ed Conroy in Korea, and Captain Jim Graham, Butch Joeckel, and John Clements in Vietnam—they represent the best that America has to offer. They are object lessons themselves. They made history. Hopefully, our young people will be inspired by their example.

If America is to remain great, it may indeed depend on how well we continue to inspire our youth to excel. Our noted Sons of Prince George's County have shown the way.

Thank you—and God Bless America.

IN RESPONSE TO THE NINTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS' RULING ON THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

HON. ADAM H. PUTNAM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Speaker, I am fortunate to have many veterans residing in my district. When I heard of the appalling actions of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals—ruling that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional—my thoughts turned to them. We are a nation standing strong today because those heroes pledged their allegiance to America with their lives, their tears and their sacred honor. What must our troops in the field today think?

Our Country came into being through a Declaration of Independence that acknowledged that we are endowed by our Creator with the unalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. This is clearly an acknowledgement in the very founding document of this Nation that we are indeed "one Nation under God."

When I conclude a constituent letter with "God bless America" is my action unconstitutional? Should that be banned, too? I stand with the tradition that allows the President to put his hand on the Bible, pledge to protect and defend the Constitution and conclude his oath with the words of George Washington, "So help me God."

It is sad that at a time when our country is at war and Americans have a renewed sense of patriotism—and what allegiance to America costs—this court is driving a wedge between us with their absurd ruling. It is my fervent hope that a common sense reading of the Constitution will eventually prevail and that liberal judges will end their war on religion in America.

As countless American leaders of all political stripes have said before me, God Bless America.

NINTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS' RULING

HON. CHARLES W. "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, today the latest in a string of absurd court decisions was handed down from a Federal Appeals Court in San Francisco. This court decided that the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional and cannot be recited in schools.

This is an unfortunate assault on America's tradition of recognizing the role of God in our country's life and as a foundation of our liberties.

This most outrageous decision cannot and will not stand. Our forefathers authored the 1st Amendment to protect Americans from a "national church or national doctrine" not from the Pledge of Allegiance. For far too often the most liberal Members of our courts have abused the 1st Amendment to remove any acknowledgment of God or a higher being from the Federal Government and our daily life.

I would simply remind my colleagues that we sit in a chamber that has the words "In God We Trust" engraved on the wall. From the beginning of our Republic a higher being has been acknowledged by this government and the Pledge of Allegiance simply is consistent with that history and tradition.

It is hardly comparable to note that the Pledge of Allegiance is relative to the establishment of a national religion, church or doctrine.

The court in San Francisco is the most overturned appeals court in the Nation. I am confident that this decision will also be overturned, but to ensure that the Pledge of Allegiance continues to be observed I am introducing legislation to amend the Constitution to ensure the Pledge of Allegiance is constitutionally protected speech.

A RISING NATION, UNDER GOD
THIS FOURTH OF JULY

HON. NICK J. RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, listen again to the words we will hear this Fourth of July: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

Given the recent Federal Court ruling about the constitutionality of our pledge of allegiance, will the day come when a Federal Court of these United States will not allow our Declaration of Independence to be read or posted on the walls of our schoolrooms across this land? I pray not.

We must always be mindful that the moral fiber of this Nation was built not upon the law of man, but rather upon the law of God.

"The longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth," said Benjamin Franklin, "that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice—is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?"

Throughout our Nation's history we have faced many challenges, fought many battles. But from troubled times, we've gained greater victories. To the American, trouble but fuels our soul. Ignites our spirit. Trouble forges our future's strength. September 11th's legacy will be no different.

This Fourth of July, let us pause to give thanks to the almighty—to remember, reclaim, and rejoice in our national spirit born of revolution, our national quest.

In President Jefferson's first inaugural address, he called us "A rising nation, spread over a wide and fruitful land, traversing all the seas with the rich productions of their industry . . . advancing rapidly to destinies beyond the reach of mortal eye."

Mountaineers are always free. We live Jefferson's words. The spirits of Flood ravaged West Virginians fan the flames of future's hope.

"The God who gave us reason," Jefferson said, "did not ask us to forego its use." And truly America has taken his words to heart. We pursue life, liberty and happiness in this great Nation with great passion.

And so it should be.

Next January, our Nation will celebrate the 200th Anniversary of Jefferson's legacy, the Lewis and Clark Expedition, a national quest that has inspired us ever since. Freedom paves the path of our national quest.

As we face new economic realities in West Virginia, we seek not only new industries, but also new economies. From new infrastructure to new technologies, we are working to build a new and brighter West Virginia.

As we face the war on terrorism, we grieve for the terrible toll it has already taken, the lives of West Virginia's precious sons and daughters. Let us remember that their sacrifice was for our quest not to falter or to fail, but rather to set sail and soar.

The rights for which our founding fathers and mothers so valiantly pledged their lives, fortunes and sacred honors—and might I add they did so, and I quote, "with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence,"—require the same from us in times of peace—and in times of war.

Jefferson's last letter, which was read on July 4th 1826 in Washington, DC, the day he would pass from this earth—concluded, "For ourselves, let the annual return of this day forever refresh our recollections of these rights and an undiminished devotion to them."

Our national quest shall endure. We remain a rising nation. The Fourth of July is our constant reminder, and the good Lord, our constant strength, despite what any court, judge, or jurisdiction of this government says to the contrary.

IN HONOR OF VINCENT J.
BILARDO, JR.

HON. KAREN MCCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual and dedicated public servant from the State of Missouri. On July 26th, Vincent J. Bilardo, Jr. will be ending his current assignment from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Kansas City District in which he has served as the Kansas City Brownfields Federal Showcase Program Director. He will leave a lasting legacy of tireless commitment to the betterment and preservation of our community and region.

Prior to joining the Corps in 1992, Mr. Bilardo began his career in public service with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) where he spent ten years at four different NASA facilities throughout the nation. His assignments included serving as a systems engineer in the Space Station Program at NASA Headquarters, a Space Shuttle propulsion systems engineer at NASA Kennedy Space Center and Vandenberg Air Force Base in California, and as the manager of a branch of fifteen research scientists charged with developing closed loop environmental control systems for future lunar and Mars exploration missions at Ames Research Center.

Mr. Bilardo began his current position with the Kansas City Brownfields Federal Showcase in 1999 which consists of both the City of Kansas City, Missouri and the Unified Government of Wyandotte County/Kansas City, Kansas. He has been responsible for developing federal and state grant applications, providing technical assistance to a number of important regional initiatives, and managing several Brownfields redevelopment projects. His efforts have earned the program national acclaim as an award winning initiative that has significantly enhanced regional investment, economic growth, and environmental quality in the communities he serves. Under Mr. Bilardo's leadership the Kansas City Brownfields Federal Showcase has partnered with economic and industrial associations to implement an aggressive strategy to rebuild infrastructure, expand operations, and improve facilities in the region.

The crowning achievement of Mr. Bilardo's tenure has been in his diligent guidance and development of the Kansas City Riverfront Heritage Trail, for which he serves as the Bi-State Program Director. The Kansas City Riverfront Heritage Trail is an 18 mile long, bistate system of bicycle and pedestrian trails, pocket parks, restored ecosystems, and trailheads that has successfully leveraged municipal, state, federal, and private funding resources. Upon completion, the Riverfront Heritage Trail will connect critical riverfront activity centers to provide recreation, promote economic investment, wetland habitat restoration, and feature the rich historical and cultural highlights of our metropolitan area's past including Lewis and Clark's Corp of Discovery expedition and their two stops along the southwestern most bend of the Missouri River. Anyone who has been involved with the Riverfront Heritage Trail is cognizant of Mr. Bilardo's immeasurable contribution to this project and of the fact that it would not be the success it is today without his passion and tireless commitment.

Mr. Bilardo will leave a large void to be filled as he returns in August to NASA's Langley Research Center in Hampton, Virginia. He will be fondly remembered by his peers and co-workers as a tireless and dedicated leader. Mr. Bilardo's amazing barbecue skills will be sorely missed by everyone who had the pleasure to work with him. It is with deep gratitude and honor that I recognize Vince Bilardo for his remarkable service to the State of Missouri. His devotion is an example to us all.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in thanking Mr. Bilardo and wishing him and his wife Heidi and their two daughters, Kendall and Rachel continued success and happiness in the adventures that await them.

THE EMERGENCY DIRECTED RAIL SERVICE ACT

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, today I introduce the Emergency Directed Rail Service Act. This legislation is intended to prepare the nation for the possibility that Amtrak will follow through on its threat to shut down. This bill is part of my effort to make sure the country is as prepared as possible should that shutdown occur.

Members are no doubt aware that Amtrak is in an extremely desperate financial situation. Amtrak contends it needs $200 million in additional cash or it will cease operations on or about July 1, 2002. Although the Administration is currently considering an Amtrak application to use the Railroad Rehabilitation and Infrastructure Financing (RRIF) loan and loan guarantee program, it is doubtful Amtrak qualifies under the statute, under the formal regulations that govern the program, or under the informal rules imposed by the Department of Transportation and the Office of Management and Budget.

Similarly, although I would support an appropriation under the right conditions to help Amtrak in the short-term while the Congress and the Administration address Amtrak for the long-term, it is unclear whether the appropriations process will be able to provide Amtrak any funds before July 1, 2002.

I am particularly concerned about the effect on freight movements in the Northeast and on commuter operations around the country and consequently on our national economy. An Amtrak shutdown could adversely affect the economy in the Northeast United States because considerable freight would not be able to get to its destination, especially plants where the Northeast Corridor is the only rail access. Moreover, commuters in the Northeast and around the country may not be able to get to work either because the commuter authority operates on Amtrak infrastructure or because the commuter authority uses Amtrak employees to operate or maintain its trains.

Accordingly, on Monday I wrote Linda Morgan, the Chairman of the Surface Transportation Board, and asked whether the Board had the power to direct freight and commuter service that would be adversely affected by an Amtrak shutdown.

Ms. Morgan responded yesterday that the STB was unclear whether it would have the power to direct freight and commuter service in the event of an Amtrak shutdown and that its emergency powers have "never been tested before in this context . . . and . . . could be challenged in court."

This country needs someone to have the power to address the fallout on freight railroads and commuters if Amtrak shuts down. The legislation I introduce today does just that. It makes it clear that the STB has the authority it needs to act in the event Amtrak ceases service.

In particular, the bill would give the STB the authority to order the continued maintenance, signaling, and dispatching of the Northeast Corridor.

It would give the STB the authority to use federal funds to compensate the entity that conducts these services and to indemnify it with respect to any increased liability exposure.

It would also authorize the STB to direct service and to provide interim financial assistance to commuter operations around the country affected by an Amtrak shutdown.

Further, current law requires that to the extent possible the Amtrak employees who already perform the work should do the work required by the directed service.

A final word of caution. I realize this bill addresses provisions of law relating to the STB and that there are interests out there who will want to attach other STB-related amendments to it. I call on them not to do so. This bill addresses a potential national transportation disaster and is limited solely to the STB's emergency directed service powers. In this case, we must put the national interest above all others.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ENHANCED PROTECTION OF OUR CULTURAL HERITAGE ACT OF 2002

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the Enhanced Protection of Our Cultural Heritage (EPOCH), Act of 2002.

The legislation that I am introducing today will increase the maximum penalties for violations of three existing statutes that protect the cultural and archaeological history of the American people, most notably, American Indians. This bill also includes language that will make any attempt to sell Native American human remains a criminal act. The United States Sentencing Commission recently recommended the statutory changes contained in this bill and these changes complement the Commission's strengthening of Federal sentencing guidelines to ensure more stringent penalties for criminals who steal from public and tribal lands. I am pleased that my colleagues, Representatives HAYWORTH and Representative MARK UDALL have joined me in co-sponsoring this important bill.

Looting of cultural remains is not a new problem but it has developed into a professional business. Today, the casual hiker who lifts an arrowhead or a potshard has become less of a problem because of increased awareness about the impact of removing such items. Instead, we are witnessing carefully planned and prepared theft by well-equipped professional looters. Professional looters have devastated individual Indians and tribal communities. These communities can do little but sit by and watch as their culture is erased, site by site as professional looters steal anything that may have value on the black market—including ancestral remains. The lack of severity in the current laws does little to deter these individuals from looting over and over again.

The three statutes that this bill amends currently impose a 5-year maximum sentence, and each includes a lower maximum for a first offense of the statute and/or a violation of the statute involving property of less than a specified value. This bill would create a 10-year maximum sentence for each statute, while eliminating the lower maximums under ARPA and NAGPRA for first offenses.

Such maximum sentences would be consistent with similar Federal statutes. For example, the 1994 law proscribing museum theft carries a 10-year maximum sentence, as do the general statutes punishing theft and the destruction of government property. Moreover, increasing the maximum sentences will give judges and the Sentencing Commission greater discretion to impose punishments appropriate to the amount of destruction a defendant has done.

Making these changes will enable the Sentencing Commission's recent sentencing guidelines to be fully implemented. The Commission increased sentencing guidelines for cultural heritage crimes, but the statutory maximum penalties contained in current law will prevent judges from issuing sentences in the upper range of the new guidelines. Those new guidelines have the enthusiastic support of the Justice and Interior Departments, the Society for American Archeology, the National Trust for Historic Preservation, numerous Native American nations, and many others. Congress must take the steps necessary to see that the guidelines take full effect.

The professional looters who pillage the rich cultural heritage of this Nation and its people are committing serious crimes. The artifacts stolen from both tribal and public lands are the legacy of all Americans and should not be robbed and sold for personal gain. Passage of this legislation would demonstrate Congress' commitment to preserving our Nation's history and our cultural heritage. I urge my colleagues to support this much-needed legislation.

I would ask that the text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

H.R. ———

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Enhanced Protection of Our Cultural Heritage Act".

SEC. 2. ENHANCED PENALTIES FOR CULTURAL HERITAGE CRIMES.

(a) ENHANCED PENALTY FOR ILLEGAL TRAFICKING IN ARCHAEOLOGICAL RESOURCES.—Section 6(d) of the Archaeological Resources Protection Act of 1979 (16 U.S.C. 470ee(d)) is amended by striking "not more than $10,000" and all that follows through the end of the subsection, and inserting "not more than $100,000, imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

(b) ENHANCED PENALTY FOR EMBEZZLEMENT AND THEFT FROM INDIAN TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 1163 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "five years" and inserting "10 years".

(c) ENHANCED PENALTY FOR ILLEGAL TRAFICKING IN NATIVE AMERICAN HUMAN REMAINS AND CULTURAL ITEMS.—Section 1170 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by inserting "or attempts to sell, purchase, use for profit, or transport for sale or profit," before "human remains"; and

(B) by striking "or imprisoned not more than 12 months, or both, and in the case of a second or subsequent violation, be fined in accordance with this title, or imprisoned not more than 5 years" and inserting "imprisoned not more than 10 years" and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "imprisoned not more than one year, or both, and in the case of a second or subsequent violation, be fined in accordance with this title, imprisoned not more than 5 years" and inserting "imprisoned not more than 10 years."

ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION WILL BE THE FIRST ORDER OF BUSINESS WHEN WE RETURN

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, our form of government rests on two pillars. One is democracy. The other is free enterprise. We are the strongest, most successful nation in the world because we have maintained the strength of both of those pillars.

We are the most durable democracy in the world because our system is constantly refreshed by new leaders and new ideas. If leaders fail, they can be voted out of office. If ideas fail, they can be either discarded or improved.

The strength of the system rests on the fact that—while not perfect—our Government is open and accountable.

We have the strongest economy in the world, because our commitment to free enterprise is strengthened by a system of open markets. Those markets—fed by free-flowing, reliable financial information—channel investment into new ideas and new enterprises. Working at its best, our free enterprise system has generated durable economic growth, wealth, and opportunity that are the envy of the world.

The corruption of one of these pillars threatens the other. The weakening of either threatens our Nation.

This week's news from MCI WorldCom was the latest in a series of disclosures that have shaken confidence in American business.

Recently, we have seen Enron collapse under the weight of inflated earnings and hidden debt. We have seen Halliburton face charges of improperly recording revenue. We've seen Tyco accused of falsifying merger information, and its CEO indicted. Arthur Andersen has been convicted of obstructing justice.

The list goes on: CMS Energy, Computer Associates, Dynegy, Global Crossing, ImClone, Kmart, Lucent, MicroStrategy, Network Associates, PNC Financial Services, Qwest, Reliant Resources, and Xerox are all facing serious questions about their business practices.

This string of disclosures threatens our economy to its core. They undermine investor confidence, scare off foreign investment, and slow an already shaky recovery.

And the impact is much more than some economic abstraction. Thousands of honest, hardworking people have lost their jobs. Millions more have seen their savings, their nest eggs, and their retirements gutted.

When corporate fraud leads to corporate failure, people get hurt.

I am not arguing that the corruption we have seen is systemic. America has some of the world's most innovative executives, people of tremendous energy, skill, and integrity.

They are the vast majority of corporate executives, and they should be the most outraged about the recent news. In my own discussions with corporate leaders, that is actually the case. They are the most outraged. They resent the notion that the corruption is systemic, that the deception is pervasive, and that "everyone is doing it."

I know—and most Americans know—that everyone is not doing it.

But the growing list of corporations under question makes clear that we aren't just talking about one or two isolated cases, or rogue executives.

The problem, instead, is a "climate"—a deregulatory, permissive atmosphere that has relied too much on corporate America to police itself. It is as if the line between right and wrong, legal and illegal, acceptable and unacceptable was so little enforced that it became blurred. Bringing it back into focus—as Enron's collapse did—revealed more than a few businesses standing on the wrong side.

The evidence rolling in is now unambiguous. Self-policing is no replacement for a vigilant cop on the beat. It is time to reform and strengthen the system.

Unfortunately, the desire for reform is not to be found in the approaches taken by the White House, the House, and the SEC.

This game of corporate dominoes we are watching is a wake up call. It is time to abandon this laissez-faire attitude and take action.

For starters, we need to make sure that the laws currently on the books are enforced. The SEC and Justice Department need to do more to aggressively and consistently investigate and prosecute cases of corporate fraud.

But enforcement alone isn't enough. We are now seeing cases where the law itself doesn't stand in the way of these egregious actions.

It is time for us to reform our system of accounting and do more to protect investors.

That is exactly what the Sarbanes bill does. And that is why it will be our first order of business when we return from recess. The Sarbanes bill makes six key improvements over our current system.

First, it creates an independent audit oversight board with the authority to set standards, conduct investigations, and impose punishment if those standards aren't met.

Second, it restricts the nonaudit services that an accounting firm can provide to public companies it audits. In other words, it keeps auditors out of the business of being a company's consultant or tax advisors in addition to being its auditor—the roles that can lead to conflicts of interest.

Third, it holds CEOs and CFOs responsible for the accuracy of operating and financial reports. If it turns out that an earnings report is deliberately misstated, those executives would forfeit profits and bonuses earned after that information was released.

Fourth, if corporate insiders sell stock, those sales must be reported to the SEC within 2 days.

Fifth, it would make sure that investment banking firms that also provide investment analysis don't mix those two functions. It also protects analysts from retaliation if they make unfavorable stock recommendations.

Sixth and finally, this bill includes expanded resources for the SEC. This will help them become more thorough investigators and enforcers. I have called the SEC a toothless tiger. This bill gives the agency some teeth.

In a message to Congress calling for the creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission, President Roosevelt said he sought to "give impetus to honest dealing in securities and thereby bring back public confidence."

It is time for us to again, "give impetus to honest dealing, and bring back public confidence."

That is what this bill does. It strengthens both our democracy and our system of free enterprise.

Senator SARBANES has done a masterful job in moving it through committee with broad bipartisan support.

For the sake of America's economy, America's workers, and the two pillars on which our nation's greatness rests, I look forward to debating it when we return.

PROGRESS IN THE SENATE

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, from time to time I have come to the floor to discuss our progress since we became the majority as Democrats in the Senate. I wanted to talk briefly about the accomplishments during this work period and the list of items we have attempted to address over the course of the now virtually 1 year that we have been in the majority. We took over officially during the month of July of last year. Technically, we are not quite there. But for all intents and purposes, we have now completed 1 year as a majority in the Senate.

We began June with work on the supplemental appropriations bill, a key piece of legislation. That legislation passed in the Senate a couple of weeks ago.

We then moved on to terrorism insurance. We passed that bill out of the Senate with an overwhelming vote.

We passed legislation which expedites the extradition of terrorist suspects. The antiterrorism legislation passed about 10 days ago.

We increased the debt limit on an overwhelmingly bipartisan basis.

We passed the Defense authorization bill, thanks to the extraordinary leadership of our colleague from Michigan, Senator LEVIN.

I might add that all of these issues—the supplemental appropriations, the terrorism insurance bill, the antiterrorism bill, the debt limit, and the Defense authorization bill—passed with overwhelming bipartisan majorities.

I am pleased to be able to announce that because I feel quite confident that is what the American people are expecting—that we attempt to work together, and that these priorities which are certainly their priorities as well be addressed in the way that allows us to enact them into law sometime very shortly.

I will say, having done as much as we can on a bipartisan basis, that I was disappointed by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle when they objected to the passage of the hate crimes legislation. We failed to achieve the 60 votes necessary to obtain cloture on hate crimes.

For the life of me, I am troubled by that. I would think that would be a 100-to-0 vote dealing with hate crimes in this country. It is something that is pernicious, and it is something that we must address in a meaningful legislative way.

We will continue to make the effort to assure that 1 day we will pass meaningful hate crimes legislation.

I also say there was another matter that was not bipartisan. That involved the Republicans' attempt to permanently repeal the estate tax.

I am very proud of the fact that we did not do that. I think that is a good fiscal policy. It is good tax policy, and I am confident that any effort to repeal the estate tax permanently would fail in the future.

Let me hasten to add that the Democrats certainly support reform of the estate tax. We supported an increase in the overall exemption to $7 million, and we are very appreciative of the widespread effort within our caucus and hopefully within the Congress itself to continue to work to reform the estate tax over a period of time. But blocking the permanent repeal of the estate tax saves the Treasury $60 billion a year when it is fully implemented, $600 billion over the course of a 10-year period of time. So we look upon this actually as an accomplishment, as we have with all of the other accomplishments during the month of June.

But I might say, as we look at accomplishments, the list has become quite significant over the course of the last 12 months.

Right after the Democrats took the majority, we passed a Patients' Bill of Rights. After the tragedy of September 11, we passed an antiterrorism use of force resolution and an immediate $40 billion response to the terrorist attacks, the Defense and homeland security appropriations bill, and the USA Patriot Act to deal with the extraordinary challenges we have with regard to law enforcement.

We passed increased airport, border, and port security. We passed terrorism insurance. We passed additional support for the airline industry, which was really struggling after the tragedy of September 11. We passed economic stimulus and unemployment insurance legislation. We passed the campaign finance reform bill. We passed an election reform bill.

We passed 57 judicial confirmations. That is more than any recent Congress has passed in the same period of time, either Republican or Democrat, even in those cases when the Senate was of the same party as the President at that particular time.

We passed clean water and brownfields revitalization legislation. We passed a sweeping comprehensive education reform bill. We passed an energy bill. We passed a farm bill. And as I just noted, we have passed the Defense authorization bill.

I would say, as we look at this list of accomplishments, it would be hard for anyone to argue we have not accomplished a good deal in our first 12 months as members of the majority.

I look with great satisfaction, with great pride, and am very grateful to all of my colleagues for the extraordinary job they have done in working through the committees—and in most cases all of this legislation has come through committees—to address the needs of America in public policy and the tremendous challenges we face as a nation.

We will continue to add to this growing list of accomplishments over the course of the next several months as we complete our work in the 107th Congress. Certainly, the 107th Congress has been historic for so many reasons, but I would say that when all is said and done, at the end of the session we will be able to look with great satisfaction, with great pride, and, I might say, with a certain degree of confidence that we have done what the American people have expected of us.

Passing this legislation is a recognition of what Democrats in the majority can do in the broad array of issues with which we have done it.

So I thank my colleagues. I thank all of those who are responsible for the work on these bills, especially our legislative leadership, the chairs of each committee where these bills have been produced, for the work within the committee, and certainly the management they have demonstrated on the Senate floor as these bills have been passed here on the floor and sent either to the House or to the President.

I see my colleague from Michigan on the floor. I will yield the floor at this time. But I again appreciate the work done by our caucus, and, I might say, in concert, on many occasions, with our Republican colleagues, to achieve the long list of accomplishments we have listed here.

I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENNEDY). The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, before the majority leader leaves the Chamber, let me say he is always giving credit to others for the accomplishments of this body—which have been many—and what he, in his traditional modesty, of course, does not make any reference to is his own leadership and the role of that leadership in these accomplishments. But there is not a Member of this body on either side of the aisle who does not recognize the extraordinary leadership of Senator DASCHLE. And that list is a tribute to his leadership. It obviously involves a lot of other people, as he pointed out. Nonetheless, it is his leadership that has led the way to a successful and long list of achievements so far in this Congress.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am grateful for his kind words. We have always had a tremendous team effort within our caucus and within the legislative leadership of the Senate but I recognize that the workhorses are the chairs. And I am speaking to one as we stand here this morning.

I thank him for his kind words. I thank the Senator for yielding.

THE SHOOTING DEATHS OF DETROIT-AREA CHILDREN

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, children are being killed in our cities in record numbers. This year, in Los Angeles, 25 have been killed. The rates are the same in Houston, New York, Chicago, and in every other city where illegal drugs are plentiful and good jobs are scarce, where access to a better life is hard but access to a gun is easy.

Parents put their children to sleep in bathtubs where they might be safer from driveby shootings. Children find guns in homes and on playgrounds, with tragic results. Drug dealers go gunning for each other and don't care who gets killed in the crossfire.

So far this year, 22 children have been wounded by gunfire in my hometown of Detroit, in the metropolitan area. Ten children have been shot and killed. Statistics alone cannot convey the extent of this ongoing tragedy. But here, briefly, are some of the sorrowful and grim stories of these children, their families, and their pain.

On February 25, Ajanee Pollard, 7 years old, was shot and killed, allegedly by a man who was upset that he had just purchased—with two counterfeit $20 bills—a defective radio from a friend of Ajanee's uncle. Ajanee, her uncle, her mother, and three siblings were getting ready to go shopping when one of the three men charged with the murder allegedly fired shots from an M1 rifle into the car Ajanee's mother was driving.

Ajanee was a second grade student at Thomas Houghten Elementary School in northwest Detroit. Ajanee had been named Student of the Month, was a midfielder in the local youth soccer league, and enjoyed going to Bible school at Genesis Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Ajanee's 6-year-old brother Jason had to have his pancreas and part of his intestines removed from the wounds he suffered as a result of the shooting. Both of Ajanee's sisters suffered gunshot wounds to the legs, and her mother was treated for injuries as well.

On March 23, Destinee Thomas, 3 years old, was shot and killed in her home while watching Mickey Mouse cartoons. A man armed with an AK-47 riddled the house with bullets.

Two men have been arrested and charged with the murder. According to police and press reports, they had been involved in a "turf battle" with two drug dealers from a rival street gang.

On March 28, Alesia Robinson, 16 years old and a junior at Kettering

High School, sat on the front porch of her home on Detroit's east side while her boyfriend played with a gun. According to police, Alesia—who wanted to become a pediatrician—asked her boyfriend to put the gun away. Instead, he pointed it at her face and pulled the trigger.

On April 3, Christopher James, 11 years old, was killed by a single gunshot wound to the head. His 12-year-old half-brother has been charged in juvenile court with manslaughter. According to family members, the two were playing with a .22 caliber revolver they had found on a playground and that the shooting was an accident.

On April 10, Brianna Caddell, 8 years old, was shot and killed while she was sleeping in her bed. Brianna, her mother Pamela Martin, and her grandmother Dorothy Caddell were fixtures at Truth Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Antoine Foote also involved in drug turf wars, was charged with her murder. According to police, he sprayed more than two dozen rounds at the house with an AK-47.

Brianna was a third grader at the John C. Marshall Elementary School. One of Brianna's classmates, Oshinique Mapp, wants to become a policewoman or doctor or teacher so she can "change the bad people." Another classmate, Jeremiah Russell, wants to go to college so he can get away from the drug dealers in his neighborhood.

On April 19, Irisha Keener, 3 years old, was shot in the head by her mother, as the two lay in bed. Her mother then committed suicide.

On April 30, Cherrel Thomas, 15 years old, was shot and killed while riding in the back seat of a Chrysler Concorde. Cherrel, by the way, was a freshman at McKenzie High School where she played trombone and baritone tuba in the school marching band and jazz ensemble. Terrill Johnson and Jesse Freeman were charged with that murder.

On May 26, Tiffany Taylor, 15 years old, was fatally shot in the head while riding in a car in Mt. Clemens with friends coming home from a roller skating party at the Great Skate Rink in Roseville. Tiffany was a freshman at Roseville Junior High School, where she was on the honor roll and led after-school programs. Police believe that someone in an abandoned house frequently used by drug dealers and addicts fired five rounds from a handgun at Tiffany as she rode by—for no apparent reason.

On June 2, DeAntoine Trammell, 10 years old, was shot and killed in his grandmother's apartment on Detroit's east side. According to eyewitnesses, the person who killed him came to the house drunk and distraught, threatened to commit suicide, then fired two shots into the kitchen wall instead. The bullets pierced the wall and went into an adjacent bedroom. Moments later, Shawn Trammell, DeAntoine's 14-year-old brother, carried his bloody body into the kitchen. The boys' mother collapsed in shock. Shawn shouted out, "Come on, Mama, come on. He's breathing!" They rushed DeAntoine to a clinic but were turned away because it is not a trauma center. DeAntoine died a day later at St. John Hospital.

DeAntoine was a fifth-grader at Bow Elementary School. His basketball team was scheduled to receive a trophy the day after he died. He loved sports, video games, cartoons, and pizza, and often helped out in the school cafeteria.

The week before DeAntoine was killed, he had been paired with Keefe Brooks, 48, a Bloomfield Hills lawyer, as part of the V.I.P. Mentors program. According to the Detroit Free Press, Brooks wanted to show DeAntoine the possibilities life held for him. "I had hoped to expose him to successful people in the city, to help him build positive images and role models," Brooks said. "I cannot bear the thought of my match having been taken from our world before I even got to know him. I cannot bear the thought of more children being slaughtered in our city."

Gun violence is still an epidemic in our cities. A teenager today is more likely to die of a gunshot wound than of all natural causes of disease. Yet we seem incapable of requiring background checks at gun shows even though the President said he would support doing so when he campaigned in 2000. We seem incapable of requiring gun manufacturers to include trigger locks with their products even though we can regulate just about every other product under the sun. We need to pass these common-sense measures to help stanch the flow of guns and blood in our cities. But the Attorney General files briefs that undermine the enforcement of existing hand gun control laws instead.

As a Nation, we hope and pray that 14-year-old Elizabeth Smart will be returned to her home in Salt Lake City safe and sound. But as a Nation, we overlook the death of Ajanee, and Destinee, and Alesia, and Christopher, and Brianna, and Irisha, and Cherrel, and Tiffany, and DeAntoine. We haven't seen home videos of them on the evening news, but we should. Their families and friends and communities feel the anguish alone.

Is it resignation? Worse yet, is it indifference? I hope neither.

Some in Detroit have responded to the epidemic. The Detroit Police Department and the Wayne County Prosecutor have launched Project Safe Neighborhoods so that criminals who use guns will be prosecuted in federal courts. They have launched Project Destinee, which is an attempt to dismantle the two rival drug gangs whose members have been implicated in that child's murder. The city has Child

Death Review Teams to learn everything possible about the murders. People are joining SOSAD, Save Our Sons And Daughters, an organization Clementine Barfield started after her son Derick was killed in 1986, and the Detroit chapter of the Million Mom March, which Shikha Hamilton runs. Other groups involved include the Neighborhood Service Organization, Youth Initiatives Project, and Pioneers for Peace.

On Saturday, May 11, a massive community forum on violence was held at Second Ebenezer Baptist Church. On May 16, a group of 350 religious leaders met at the Northwest Activity Center to kick off their Positive Youth Development Initiative, a collaborative effort among government, religious, and community leaders to help at-risk children. On June 11, Detroit Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick announced a six-point program to curb the violence.

The funerals for the slain children have become impromptu community forums and rallies where people's determination and hope have commingled with their grief and outrage.

The Poet Langston Hughes asked:

What happens to a dream deferred?
Does it dry up
Like a raisin in the sun?
Or fester like a sore—
And then run?
Does it stink like rotten meat?
Or crust and sugar over—like a syrupy sweet?
Maybe it just sags
like a heavy load.
Or does it explode?

We have learned, sadly, that dreams deferred do explode—in gunfire. And we have seen, sadly, what happens when people don't even have the capacity or the chance to dream.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about important legislation that we will be considering as soon as we return from the Fourth of July recess.

In February of this year, the banking committee, of which the Chair is a member—and I appreciate the opportunity to serve with him—began a series of 10 hearings touching at ways to strengthen our accounting system, protect investors, and make needed reforms at the SEC.

We all understand every day the growing need to be able to do that.

Our hearings didn't necessarily make the headlines with subpoenas sent to Ken Lay of Enron or Andrew Fastow, but the work that we did I believe was incredibly important, very thorough and very thoughtful.

Chairman SARBANES, our chairman of the committee, is to be commended for his impressive leadership and thoughtfulness and hard work on this subject. At the end of the day, it is due to his commitment to doing this carefully and due to the commitment of my colleagues on the committee who followed panel after panel of witnesses closely—from former SEC Chairs, to Paul Volcker, to consumer groups, to well-respected academics—that we now have before us a bill that will ultimately make the biggest difference for investors and for the markets. We critically need this.

In March, in the midst of our marathon of hearings, I was very pleased to join with Senator DODD and Senator CORZINE in the introduction of the Investor Confidence in Public Accountability Act of 2002. Our bill was, I believe, a good beginning, an excellent way to begin to tackle the problems about which we were learning. It was measured. It was strong.

I thank Chairman SARBANES for including many of the provisions of our bill in the ultimate bill that has been reported to the floor of the Senate.

This is an excellent bill. We need only to look at the vote in the committee. It passed 17 to 4. It has strong bipartisan support. I hope that support will continue on the floor of the Senate as we take up this legislation in the coming weeks.

But it also has its detractors. There are some, of course, who do not like the legislation. They make outlandish comments about Government takeovers of the accounting industry. But that is not the bill for which I voted. It is not the bill for which Chairman SARBANES voted. That is not the bill for which Senator ENZI, the Senate's very own accountant, voted.

I would like to explain briefly some of the key components of this bill and why they make sense.

In this legislation, we create a strong new regulatory public oversight board to establish and enforce accounting standards, quality control, and ethics standards for public companies. The evidence indicates it is no longer enough for the industry to police itself. Few people would contest that now.

That actually has been in debate over the last several years—two different philosophies, one coming in with a new administration in the House of Representatives back in the mid-1990s. I remember debating this with former Speaker Newt Gingrich and efforts to deregulate our industries and our oversight, with the idea there would be self-regulation and oversight.

We know now that there needs to be public accountability, transparency, openness. But there needs to be public accountability if there is going to be integrity in these systems and if people are going to be willing to invest.

The oversight board we have placed in this legislation would be independently funded by fees on public companies, therefore providing us insulation from the politics of the time. It would conduct regular inspections of accounting firms. The five-member board would have two people with accounting backgrounds and a balanced approach to the board.

We also establish new restrictions on the mixing of consulting services and auditing services, which are very important. We have seen, unfortunately, specific examples of where the mixing of these two services has created devastating results for people.

There has long been a concern that auditors may be tempted to overlook some questionable accounting practices in order not to lose lucrative consulting contracts from the companies they audit. This bill seeks to address that problem without simply banning all consulting services. I think it is an important and reasonable and balanced approach.

Some services would be banned—bookkeeping, financial systems design, investment advice, human resources consulting—while others would have to be approved by the company's audit committee, such as tax services.

Of course, auditing companies would be able to offer any consulting services to a company they were not presently auditing.

We also ensure auditor independence, which is so critical.

Another concern raised in our 10 hearings was that sometimes, over time, auditors develop too cozy a relationship with the companies they audit. They become less critical and more accommodating. We addressed this in the bill we reported from committee.

The bill before us simply says that accounting firms would be required to rotate the leading auditor and review partners of an audit after 5 consecutive years of auditing a public company. It does not force companies to find a new auditor, it just simply requires a rotation of the auditor. Some have feared that this would be too extreme, and the bill is sensitive to those concerns. But we believe it is important that we ensure auditor independence.

Our bill also sets up an internal corporate whistleblower mechanism. This is one particular component of the bill about which I am especially pleased. The bill includes an amendment I offered regarding establishing corporate whistleblower mechanisms. I want to ensure that the audit committees of public companies establish a way for confidential, anonymous submissions of statements by employees regarding questionable accounting procedures.

With Enron and other scandals, people in the company knew there were problems but had nowhere to turn. They were trapped in a corporate culture which squashed dissent. My amendment guarantees that there will be a designated way to report problems to people who are in a position to do something about it, and it seeks to protect those employees who are simply acting in the best interests of their companies and their companies' investors.

I am glad to say that not only do I have the support of such people as my chairman but others, such as the Financial Services Roundtable, have weighed in to support this very important amendment.

Guarantees of new levels of corporate responsibility are also an important part of this legislation. A key component of the bill I am pleased to support is the new level of corporate responsibility required under this bill.

Under the bill that will be before us, audit committees must now be completely independent of management and will be responsible for the appointment, compensation, and oversight of the auditors. The bill also ensures that during a blackout period, when companies are prohibited from selling stock, corporate leaders will also be barred from trading the stock.

Perhaps most significantly of all, this Congress has an opportunity to tell CEOs and CFOs that they must certify the accuracy of financial reports and will have to forfeit bonuses up to 12 months after an earnings misstatement which was brought about by material noncompliance with securities laws.

This is essential. We have had too many corporate leaders walk away from companies they have destroyed, with tens—and sometimes hundreds—of millions of dollars in their pocket while their employees find their pensions drained, their jobs gone, and their dreams destroyed.

This is a strong, comprehensive bill. It does not include every reform that we need, but I would like to take a moment to highlight another piece of legislation that I hope we will incorporate into the bill in its final passage. That is Senator LEAHY's Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act.

I am proud, also, to be a cosponsor of this important legislation because I think it is a very sound bill and gets to some of the serious reforms that corporate America needs to face. Among other things, it makes it a crime to destroy or conceal records with the intent to obstruct or influence a Federal investigation, such as an SEC examination into accounting malfeasance.

It also amends our Federal bankruptcy law to make penalties relating to the violation of certain Federal and State securities laws nondischargeable.

I am very happy to say the bill provides legal protections again for corporate whistleblowers, employees who report to regulators or Congress or their supervisors. I believe all of these provisions are important and will improve accountability for our country.

Prior to the committee vote on this bill, there was an emerging theme in the media that momentum was fading for strong reform. Powerful special interests, a few congressional opponents of reform were winning, it seemed. But all of that has changed. Unfortunately, the scandals we have seen emerging have reminded us once again of the importance to act. We have seen the stunning revelation regarding WorldCom and the billions of dollars of earnings misrepresented, the 17,000 jobs that will be lost; 17,000 people who did nothing wrong—they got up every day, they went to work, they did their jobs, they worked hard—now are suffering the consequences of a few people at the top who thought it better to cook the books than to represent their employees and their investors.

All of this, of course, came on the heels of Enron and Global Crossing and Tyco and Adelphia and Xerox. We need now only to look to the ongoing weaknesses in our capital markets to see why the 17-to-4 vote in our committee should not have been so surprising.

Investors are concerned. They are angry, and rightfully so. They wonder, can I trust the information companies are giving to me? How do we know if our stocks are valued appropriately? Which company is next?

What we are doing in the Senate is nothing less than trying to ensure the long-term viability of our capitalist system. We have a system that is the strongest and the best in the world, but something is broken. We need to act. A corporate culture of earnings mismanagement and gamesmanship, unfortunately, has prevailed in some quarters. It is casting a pall over too many other publicly traded companies. That is not right, and it has to stop.

We know the majority of companies have integrity. They are doing the right thing. They are providing accurate information. Our corporate leaders who are acting responsibly are the most concerned about what is happening. Too many honest, hard-working people at good, solid companies are indirectly suffering due to the malfeasance of a few greedy people.

As we move ahead, I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, and with our Presiding Officer, to make sure what we did in committee can be done on the floor, and as quickly as possible.

Republicans such as the Senator from Wyoming, MIKE ENZI, have shown true leadership in joining with the chairman and 15 others on the committee. This is the first step. We need a strong, good debate on this bill and an overwhelming vote to send a message to investors, to pension holders, to hard-working employees and companies everywhere, to those corporate executives who are working hard and doing the right thing, that we are united and that we are serious about making sure their interests are protected. We will still have to reconcile this with a much, unfortunately, more modest version passed in the House, and we will have to send it to the President.

I hope the President will join us in the strongest possible bill. It is incredibly important that we help bring back the integrity and confidence so important in our markets. We are the greatest country in the world. We have had the greatest capitalist system, but there are serious problems today and serious questions. We have the responsibility to act in a way that will stabilize the economy, give investors confidence, let employees know that their pensions will be protected and their hard work will be recognized for the future, and that we will do the kinds of things that will allow us to continue the strongest economy in the world.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, is the Senate conducting morning business at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Are Senators permitted to speak therein?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are, for up to 10 minutes each.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair. I ask unanimous consent that I may speak as long as I may desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONNECTING THE DOTS ON IRAQ

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, over the last several weeks, a number of revelations have surfaced about how our intelligence agencies failed to analyze and connect the pieces of information that they obtained. According to these news accounts, while the September 11 attacks were a shock to the American people, they may not have been a total surprise to the intelligence arms of our Government.

While there is no smoking gun to indicate that the FBI, the CIA, or anyone else or any other agency knew the totality of the September 11 plot before it was carried out, it now seems fairly clear that there were known pieces of information, which, if thoroughly and properly analyzed, could have put our Government on a higher state of alert for a major terrorist attack upon the United States.

President Bush himself has acknowledged that our intelligence agencies were not connecting the dots that would have prepared our homeland for a devastating act of terrorism. In partial response, the President has proposed the creation of a Department of Homeland Security with a new bureau that is intended to sort through the intelligence reports and hopefully connect the dots that are sometimes overlooked or unappreciated by the FBI and/or CIA. The proposal has some merit. However, I am troubled with the manner in which this and other proposals are being crafted by the administration. Shrouded often in ambiguity and cloaked often in deep secrecy, this administration continues suddenly to sometimes unexpectedly drop its decisions upon the public and Congress, and then expect obedient approval without question, without debate, and without opposition.

The Senate is not like that. We scrutinize, we debate, we ask questions.

For months, the President has been sending signals that U.S. efforts to topple Saddam Hussein's regime in Iraq will involve direct military action. In his State of the Union address on January 29, 2002, the President listed Iraq as a member of an "axis of evil" that seeks to attack the United States with acts of terrorism and weapons of mass destruction. The President punctuated his bold words with a warning that he "will not wait on events, while dangers gather," and that "the United States of America will not permit the world's most dangerous regimes to threaten us with the world's most destructive weapons."

That is saber rattling. This saber rattling prompted many questions for the American public, for Members of Congress, and for our allies. The question being: Will we invade Iraq? When will it happen? Will the United States go it alone? These are some of the questions.

On February 12, 2002, during a Budget Committee hearing, I questioned the Secretary of State about the administration's designs on Iraq. Unfortunately, the answers I got were not sufficiently clear to put to rest my questions. Secretary of State Powell stated that the President had "made no decisions about war."

Now, Mr. President, when I was in a two-room school in Algonquin, WV, in 1923, I could read through that answer. That should not require the mind of a genius to interpret.

Secretary Powell stated that the President had "made no decisions about war." So my question remained unanswered.

The Secretary, for whom I have a great deal of respect and with whom I have been associated for many years in several difficult decisions that have arisen over those years, the Secretary of State also stated that he—meaning the President—"has no plan on his desk right now to begin a war with any nation."

I go back to that two-room schoolhouse in Algonquin in southern West Virginia. I can figure that out. That is not answering the question. Everybody knew it. The Secretary of State knew it. He did not intend to answer that question. While I have a great deal of respect for Secretary Powell, his answers provided more in the way of qualifications and confusion than in the pursuance of clarity.

Earlier this month, President Bush added another dimension to our national security policy. On June 1, 2002, he addressed the cadets at West Point on the progress of the war on terrorism. In his remarks, the President argued that deterrence and containment by themselves are not enough to fight terrorism. He said, "In the world we have entered, the only path to safety is the path of action." And he urged Americans "to be ready for preemptive action when necessary."

In order to be ready for such action, the President said that the U.S. military "must be ready to strike at a moment's notice in any dark corner of the world."

According to a Washington Post article on June 10, the National Security Council is drafting a new defense doctrine to emphasize the use of preemptive attacks against terrorists and rogue nations. According to this article, the Department of Defense is also now studying how to launch "no warning" raids using a "Joint Stealth Task Force" that includes aircraft, ground troops, and submarines.

Mr. President, these "no warning" raids will be a devastating application of military force from the air, the ground, and the sea.

On Sunday, June 16, the Washington Post followed up on its reports about this new national security strategy with an article entitled, "President Broadens Anti-Hussein Order." According to this article:

President Bush earlier this year signed an intelligence order directing the CIA to undertake a comprehensive, covert program to topple Saddam Hussein, including authority to use lethal force to capture the Iraqi president, according to informed sources.

One source said that the CIA covert action should be viewed largely as preparatory to a military strike.

It then discussed the difficulties involved in carrying out an attack on Iraq, including the large number of U.S. forces that would be required, the size of the Iraqi military, and the contentious relationships between Iraqi opposition groups and the United States.

So what we have is a lot of dots—a dot here, a dot there—about what the foreign policy of the United States is; a dot here, a dot there about what military action our Government might pursue.

I am constrained to ask, Is this a way to run a constitutional government? Is this a way to lead in a Republic? I hear so many of our Senators talk about this “democracy.” This is not a democracy.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks certain excerpts from SA No. 10 and SA No. 14 of the essays by Jay and Madison and Hamilton, the Federalist essays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Senators for themselves can, once again, if they ever have read, read what Madison says about a democracy and what he says about a republic. In those two essays, Senators will find the distinction between a democracy and a republic. I believe this should be required reading on the part of all Senators and all other public officials, essay No. 10 and essay No. 14 by Madison. If Senators want to know the difference between a democracy and a republic, turn to those two essays. Madison is quite clear in the difference.

Saddam Hussein has now had 11 years since the end of the gulf war to rebuild his war machine. New military action against Iraq would be costly in terms of national treasure and blood. It is exactly because of these kinds of considerations that the Constitution vests in Congress the authority to declare war, and the responsibility to finance military action.

We have heard Members of the Senate on both sides of the aisle express their support for military operations against Iraq. The case has yet to be argued, at least in any serious detail, or in open debate before the people. Bold talk of chasing down evildoers, stirring patriotic words, expressions of support for our men and women in uniform, these all have an important place in our national life, but the American people deserve to hear why we need to be an aggressor, why we need to risk the lives of their sons and daughters, why we need to take preemptive action against Iraq.

Now, perhaps we should do so. I am not saying we should not, but I am saying that Congress needs to know about this, and the American people need to have more than just patriotic expressions with visual backup, assemblies and/or words.

If it is the President's intent to oust Saddam Hussein, he would be well advised to obtain the support of the American people, and that would involve seeking congressional authorization to use military force.

I very well understand there are some military actions that we must take on virtually a moment's notice in the interest of protecting this Nation and its people, and the Commander in Chief has that inherent authority under the Constitution. But there comes a time when the Commander in Chief still needs to level with the American people and Congress.

We saw what happened in the case of the war in Vietnam when the support of the people back home declined, when the support of the American people began to go away from pursuing the Vietnam war. That support of the American people is necessary, and that support is expressed in many cases by their elected Representatives in both Houses of Congress. Yet this administration persists in an unwise and dangerous effort to keep the public largely in the dark.

I have to repeat to the administration time and time again, the legislative branch is not a subordinate body. It is not a subordinate department. It is not subordinate to the executive branch. It is an equal branch of the Government. So I think the administration, in embracing secrecy so much and so deliberately, is acting unwisely. It makes no sense. It is dangerous.

We have all seen the folly of military missions launched and maintained without sufficient support of the people. Time and again history has demonstrated that in a democratic republic such as the United States, the sustained support of the people is essential for the success of any long-term military mission.

I recall all too well the nightmare of Vietnam. I remember all too well how Congress, without sufficient information and debate, approved military action in that conflict. I recall all too well the antiwar protests, the demonstrations, the campus riots, the tragic deaths at Kent State, as well as the resignation of a President and a Vice President. I remember all too well the gruesome daily body counts in Vietnam.

The United States was a deeply divided country, and I would say we better read the Constitution more than we read the polls, instead of vice versa—reading the polls first and last and the Constitution somewhere in between.

I recall all too well the words of Senator Ernest Gruening of Alaska, who was sworn in in the same class which I was sworn, 1958. He was one of the two Senators who voted against the Gulf of Tonkin resolution that gave the President the authority to take military action in Vietnam. Senator Gruening said this:

By long and established practice, the Executive conducts the Nation's foreign policy. But the Constitution and particularly, by constitutional mandate, the Senate has the right and the duty in these premises to advise and consent. Especially is this true when it is specifically called upon by the Executive . . . for its participation in momentous decisions of foreign policy.

I recall all too well the words of the other Senator who voted against the Tonkin Gulf resolution. In urging Congress to investigate and hold hearings before endorsing the President's plan, Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon expressed his concern that the Pentagon and the executive branch were perpetrating a “snow job” upon Congress and the American people. If the Senate approved the Tonkin Gulf resolution, Senator Morse warned that “Senators who vote for it will live to regret it.” I was one of those who voted for it, and thanks to the good Lord, I am still living. I am the last of that class of 1958. I regret that vote on the Tonkin Gulf resolution. I wish I had had the foresight to vote against it, as did Senators Morse and Gruening.

I am determined to do everything I can to prevent this country from becoming involved in another Vietnam nightmare. This determination begins with Congress being fully and sufficiently informed on the undertakings of our Government, especially if it involves a commitment to military action.

We have to depend upon the leadership of the Senate and both sides of the aisle to insist that the Senate be informed. We also have to depend on the leadership of the other body on both sides of the aisle to insist on these things. We represent the American people. They send us here. No President sends me here. No President can send me home. No President sends the distinguished Senator from Nebraska here. No President can send him home. He comes here by virtue of the people of his State. They vote to send him, and he is here to represent them. He is not here to represent a President.

I realize, as our Founding Fathers realized, that in a government of separated powers, one branch of government has to be able to act swiftly and unilaterally at times. Of course, that is the executive branch. In this age of terrorism and weapons of mass destruction, these abilities are needed more than ever. We all know that.

But I also realize, as did our Founding Fathers, the need for another branch, this branch, the legislative branch, to be able to put the brakes on the executive branch. Those brakes include investigation, hearings, debate, votes, and the power of the purse. That is the greatest raw power, may I say to the pages on both sides of the aisle; the power of the purse is the greatest raw power in this Government—the greatest. Cicero said, “There is no fortress so strong that money cannot take it.” Remember that. There is a new book out on Cicero; I must get it. I have heard about it. Remember, I say to these bright young pages—some of them will be Senators one day—Cicero said, “There is no fortress so strong that money cannot take it.” He was right.

So, I have heard a lot of talk about the need for this country to speak with one voice on matters of war and peace. Debate on such important issues, say these people, might reveal differences in views on how we ought to act. Our opponents would revel in our discord and the President would lose credibility as he went toe to toe with our enemies. It is as though some think that Congress is an impediment to the interests of this country.

I am sure the executive branch believes quite strongly from time to time that Congress is an impediment. But we still have the Constitution. Thank God for the Constitution. I hold it in my hand, the Constitution of the United States. And also in this little booklet is the Declaration of Independence. I will refer to that a little later. Here is that Constitution. Thank God for the Constitution. The legislative branch can always turn to this Constitution. That anchor holds. There is an old hymn, "The Anchor Holds." Well, this is the anchor, the Constitution which I hold in my hand. This is the anchor. It holds.

I don't think debate is a weakness. Debate is our strength. Debate shows that we are a nation of laws, not of men. It shows that no man, no king—we do not have a king in this country. We have some people who are apparently monarchists. I think we have some in this Chamber who are sometimes monarchists when it comes to voting. They want to support the executive branch. The executive branch will take care of itself. Remember that, may I say to the young pages.

There are three branches of Government: The judicial branch—it will always uphold the prerogatives of the judicial branch, the executive branch—it will always uphold the prerogatives of the executive branch, and grab for more; but it is here in the legislative branch that sometimes half, or a large portion, of the membership does not speak for the prerogatives of the legislative branch under this Constitution; they speak for the prerogatives of the executive branch.

"We must support the Commander in Chief," they say. "We must support the Commander in Chief." But, fellow Senators, this Commander in Chief is only here for 4 years. I have served with 11 Commanders in Chief. We have Commanders in Chief, but we do not have to support the Commander in Chief. I don't care if he is a Democrat. I don't have to support the Commander in Chief. And I sometimes don't, even if he is a Democrat.

Well, debate shows that we are a nation of laws and that no man—neither king nor Commander in Chief—has the right to send us to war by virtue of his decision alone.

This Republic—not this democracy; forget it. Read Madison's essays, No. 10 and No. 14—this Republic. There it is, we pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic—not "the democracy." The city-states in the time of Athens could have democracies. My little town of Sophia, with about 1,180 persons, could be a democracy. It is small enough. All the people could come together and they could speak for all the people, but not in this great country of 280 million people. This is a republic. We ought to get in the habit of speaking of it as a republic.

We are a model to the world in this respect. By debating and voting on issues of war and peace, Congress is able to express the will of the American people and galvanize support for what could be a costly conflict. Debate and well-meaning disagreement on important issues do not weaken the resolve of the American people. It is secret motives—here is where problems begin—secret motives, clandestine plotting, and lack of confidence in the public that are the swift solvent of our national morale.

If it is the path that this Nation is to take, President Bush ought to present his case to Congress before we must use military force to overthrow Saddam Hussein. That is why the Congress must ask important questions. At least there are some leaders in both Houses, in both parties, who need to be taken into these secrets.

That is why the Congress must ask important questions, including if we are successful in getting rid of the authoritarian who is now in power in Iraq, who will take his place? Have we covertly hand picked a leader for the future of Iraq? If so, who is he? Once such a military operation is undertaken, how will we know when the mission is accomplished?

Let there be no doubt, from what I now know and understand, I would support a change in regimes in Iraq. I suppose every Member of this body would probably do that. There is no doubt in my mind about the serious and continuing danger that Iraq poses to the stability of the Persian Gulf region. Saddam Hussein has sought to build weapons of mass destruction and long-range missiles. His military regularly attempts to shoot down our fighter planes that patrol the No Fly Zones over Iraq. He has worked to heighten the conflict between Israel and the Palestinians. He has promoted the starvation of Iraqi children so that he and his cabal can live in palaces. Saddam Hussein is a scourge on the people of Iraq and a menace to peace. We know that. I know these things. I wasn't exactly born yesterday. But it is the duty of Congress to ask questions. Members of Congress need not be intimidated by polls. We are expected to ask questions.

It is the duty of Congress to ask questions so that we, the people's branch of government, and as a result, the American people, will know what we may be getting ourselves into. It may be that the President already has answers to these questions about Iraq, and that we might awake one morning to see those answers printed in the morning newspaper. As we learned all too well in Korea, Vietnam, and Somalia, it is dangerous to present Congress and the American people with a fait accompli—that is a dangerous thing to do, no matter what the polls say. Those polls can drop suddenly—present Congress and the American people with a fait accompli of important matters on foreign affairs.

When the Administration is asking the American people to send their sons and daughters into harm's way, knowing that some will never return, it is essential that Congress know more, not less, about the Administration's planned course of action. Congress must not be left to connect dots!

All that Congress has been promised so far is that the President would consult with Congress about military action against Iraq. This promise falls well short of the mark, particularly because of what the Administration offers in the way of consultation. Like other members of the Senate, I was taken by surprise by the President's sudden announcement of his plan to create a massive new Department of Homeland Security. I favored such, but it was all hatched in the bowels of the White House. And according to the press, there were, I think, four persons who provided the genius behind the creation. In an unbelievable twist of logic, the Administration maintains that it actually consulted with Congress on the proposal. The administration knows better than that. The President's chief of staff was quoted in The Washington Post on June 9, 2002, as saying, "We consulted with agencies and with Congress, but they might not have known that we were consulting." How do you like that? I have been in Congress 50 years now. I have never seen anything like that, where the administration says we have consulted with Congress but they might not have known we were consulting.

This does not even deserve to qualify for George Orwell's definition of double speak. Such a claim is plain, unmitigated garbage.

In the aftermath of the carnage and turmoil of the Vietnam war, Congress approved the War Powers Resolution, that provided procedures for Congress and the President to participate in decisions to send U.S. Armed Forces into hostilities. Section 4(a)(1) required the President to report to Congress any introduction of U.S. forces into hostilities or imminent hostilities. Section 3 requires that the "President in every possible instance shall; consult with Congress before introducing" U.S. Armed Forces into hostilities or imminent hostilities.

In face of this Congressional resolution, this administration refuses to consult with anyone outside its own inner circle—well, let its own inner circle provide the money when the time comes—anyone outside its own inner circle about what appears to be its plan for imminent hostilities. This Administration convenes meetings of its trusted few in little underground rooms, while sending decoy envoys to meet with Congress and members of the press, and the public.

I have not seen such Executive arrogance and secrecy since the Nixon Administration, and we all know what happened to that group.

I remember too well the Executive arrogance and extreme secrecy that lead to the Iran-Contra scandal. Selling weapons to a terrorist nation in exchange for hostages, and using that money to finance an illegal war in Central America. What a great plan that was! I guess I can understand why the Reagan Administration did not want to tell Congress about that foreign policy adventure.

I have no doubt that as I speak, there are some within this Administration who are preparing to carry out some sort of attack against Iraq. Well, that's all right. We have to make plans before we do things. I am not sure who they are, but I am connecting the dots, and I am concerned about the picture that is developing.

If the President needs to take decisive military action to prevent the imminent loss of American lives, he will receive broad support. But if this country is moving methodically and deliberately toward some kind of showdown with Iraq, Congress is entitled to good-faith consultations from the executive branch. We must consider and debate whether we should use military force against Saddam Hussein. And, barring the most exceptional of circumstances, Congress must vote to authorize the President to use military force against Iraq prior to the outbreak of hostilities if, after appropriate debate and consideration, Congress comes to that conclusion.

As Senator Gruening pointed out, it is the role of the Senate to advise and consent in foreign policy. And those words did not originate with Senator Gruening. Read the Constitution.

As the War Powers Resolution points out, it is the role of Congress to be active participants in foreign affairs, and certainly such adventures as making war.

So, as we proceed, let us connect the dots.

As the Constitution demands, it is the role of Congress to declare war. Yes, we have a Commander in Chief. But what Army and what Navy does he have to command if Congress does not provide the money?

When the President is ready to present his case to Congress, I am ready to listen. But I think we all must be tired of trying to connect dots in the dark.

From this view of the subject, it may be concluded, that a pure Democracy, by which I mean, a Society, consisting of a small number of citizens, who assemble and administer the Government in person, can admit of no cure for the mischiefs of faction. A common passion or interest will, in almost every case, be felt by a majority of the whole; a communication and concert results from the form of Government itself; and there is nothing to check the inducements to sacrifice the weaker party, or an obnoxious individual. Hence it is, that such Democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been found incompatible with personal security, or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives, as they have been violent in their deaths. Theoretic politicians, who have patronized this species of Government, have erroneously supposed, that by reducing mankind to a perfect equality in their political rights, they would, at the same time, be perfectly equalized and assimilated in their possessions, their opinions, and their passions.

A Republic, by which I mean a Government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect, and promises the cure for which we are seeking. Let us examine the points in which it varies from pure Democracy, and we shall comprehend both the nature of the cure, and the efficacy which it must derive from the Union.

The two great points of difference between a Democracy and a Republic are, first, the delegation of the Government, in the latter, to a small number of citizens elected by the rest; secondly, the greater number of citizens, and greater sphere of country, over which the latter may be extended.

The effect of the first difference is, on the one hand to refine and enlarge the public views, by passing them through the medium of a chosen body of citizens, whose wisdom may best discern the true interest of their country, and whose patriotism and love of justice, will be least likely to sacrifice it to temporary or partial considerations. Under such a regulation, it may well happen that the public voice pronounced by the representatives of the people, will be more consonant to the public good, than if pronounced by the people themselves convened for the purpose. On the other hand, the effect may be inverted. Men of factious tempers, of local prejudices, or of sinister designs, may by intrigue, by corruption or by other means, first obtain the suffrages, and then betray the interests of the people. The question resulting is, whether small or extensive Republics are most favorable to the election of proper guardians of the public weal: and it is clearly decided in favor of the latter by two obvious considerations.

In the first place it is to be remarked that however small the Republic may be, the Representatives must be raised to a certain number, in order to guard against the cabals of a few; and that however large it may be, they must be limited to a certain number, in order to guard against the confusion of a multitude. Hence the number of Representatives in the two cases, not being in proportion to that of the Constituents, and being proportionally greatest in the small Republic, it follows, that if the proportion of fit characters, be not less, in the large than in the small Republic, the former will present a greater option, and consequently a greater probability of a fit choice.

In the next place, as each Representative will be chosen by a greater number of citizens in the large than in the small Republic, it will be more difficult for unworthy candidates to practise with success the vicious arts, by which elections are too often carried; and the suffrages of the people being more free, will be more likely to centre on men who possess the most attractive merit, and the most diffusive and established characters.

It must be confessed, that in this, as in most other cases, there is a mean, on both sides of which inconveniences will be found to lie. By enlarging too much the number of electors, you render the representative too little acquainted with all their local circumstances and lesser interests; as by reducing it too much, you render him unduly attached to these, and too little fit to comprehend and pursue great and national objects. The Federal Constitution forms a happy combination in this respect; the great and aggregate interests being referred to the national, the local and particular, to the state legislatures.

The other point of difference is, the greater number of citizens and extent of territory which may be brought within the compass of Republican than of Democratic Government; and it is this circumstance principally which renders factious combinations less to be dreaded in the former than in the latter. The smaller the society, the fewer probably will be the distinct parties and interests composing it; the fewer the distinct parties and interests, the more frequently will a majority be found of the same party; and the smaller the number of individuals composing a majority, and the smaller the compass within which they are placed, the more easily will they concert and execute their plans of oppression. Extend the sphere, and you take in a greater variety of parties and interests; you make it less probable that a majority of the whole will have a common motive to invade the rights of other citizens; or if such a common motive exists, it will be more difficult for all who feel it to discover their own strength, and to act in unison with each other. Besides other impediments, it may be remarked, that where there is a consciousness of unjust or dishonorable purposes, communication is always checked by distrust, in proportion to the number whose concurrence is necessary.

Hence it clearly appears, that the same advantage, which a Republic has over a Democracy, in controlling the effects of faction, is enjoyed by a large over a small Republic—is enjoyed by the Union over the States composing it.

The error which limits Republican Government to a narrow district, has been unfolded and refuted in preceding papers. [See Essays 9 and 10.] I remark here only, that it seems to owe its rise and prevalence, chiefly to the confounding of a republic with a democracy: And applying to the former reasonings drawn from the nature of the latter. The true distinction between these forms was also adverted to on a former occasions. [See Essay 10.] It is, that in a democracy, the people meet and exercise the government in person; in a republic they assemble and administer it by their representatives and agents. A democracy consequently will be confined to a small spot. A republic may be extended over a large region.

To this accidental source of the error may be added the artifice of some celebrated authors, whose writings have had a great share in forming the modern standard of political opinions. Being subjects either of an absolute, or limited monarchy, they have endeavored to heighten the advantages or palliate the evils of those forms; by placing in comparison with them, the vices and defects of the republican, and by citing as specimens of the latter, the turbulent democracies of ancient Greece, and modern Italy. Under the confusion of names, it has been an easy task to transfer to a republic, observations applicable to a democracy only, and among others, the observation that it can never be established but among a small number of people, living within a small compass of territory.

Such a fallacy may have been the less perceived as most of the governments of antiquity were of the democratic species; and even in modern Europe, to which we owe the great principle of representation, no example is seen of a government wholly popular, and founded at the same time wholly on that principle. If Europe has the merit of discovering this great mechanical power in government, by the simple agency of which, the will of the largest political body may be concentrated, and its force directed to any object, which the public good requires; America can claim the merit of making the discovery the basis of unmixed and extensive republics. It is only to be lamented, that any of her citizens should wish to deprive her of the additional merit of displaying its full efficacy on the establishment of the comprehensive system now under her consideration.

As the natural limit of a democracy is that distance from the central point, which will just permit the most remote citizens to assemble as often as their public functions demand; and will include no greater number than can join in those functions; so the natural limit of a republic is that distance from the center, which will barely allow the representatives of the people to meet as often as may be necessary for the administration of public affairs.

THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we all know that on Wednesday, in a 2-to-1 decision, a three-judge panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the United States Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional. The court held that the pledge was unconstitutional because in 1954 the Congress had the audacity—imagine that—to include a reference to God in its provisions.

Some say these are just mechanical, ceremonial provisions. Get out of my face. That may be what some people think, but the majority of people in this country I don't believe are thinking in terms of ceremonial language.

I was a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives at that time. I am the only Member of Congress today in either body who can say that I was a Member of the House of Representatives on June 7, 1954, when the words “under God” were included in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Now I see in the morning paper that the next thing these misguided atheists are wanting to do is to challenge the words “In God we trust.”

I was a Member of the House of Representatives on that same date, coincidentally, June 7, 1 year later, 1955, when the House voted to add the words “In God we trust” to the Nation's coins and currency. Every time you take out a dollar bill—that is a pretty popular bill in my lifetime, a dollar bill; here it is—on it we read the words “In God we trust.” It is all there. It is on the coins.

I was a Member of the House of Representatives when Congress voted to make that the motto, and here it is, inscribed, which is said in marble, “In God we trust,” right here over this door to the Chamber.

Over to my left are those words, “Novus Ordo Seclorum,” a new order of the ages.

“E Pluribus Unum,” all in one, one in all.

Over here, “Annuit coeptis,” God has favored our undertakings.

Here are these inscriptions. Bring in your stone masons and take these off the walls. That is what these pernicious atheists are saying. They want everything to suit themselves.

God have mercy on them. But if they have their way, we will have to have stonemasons come into this Chamber and chisel off these words.

They are not going to have their way. The people of these United States are not going to stand for this. And the courts had better take notice and kind of draw back a little bit. After all, if the American people do not believe in it and if they do not support it, that court decision is not going to be obeyed.

The courts, starting with the Supreme Court, need to take a new look at this first amendment. If anything will ever result in amending the first amendment, then continue to go down this road, I say to the courts. They ought to draw back just a little bit distant from going down the road they are presently on.

I am proud to inform my colleagues that I was in the House when Joint Resolution 243, which was entitled “A Joint Resolution to codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America” was enacted. That resolution was approved by the House on June 7, 1954—almost half century ago.

The plaintiff in the case that was just decided is a self-described atheist. His daughter attends elementary school in California. The public schools there, as elsewhere, begin each school day with the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. If this court's outlandish and ill-conceived decision is allowed to stand, it will mean that children in public schools in at least nine states will no longer be allowed to recite the pledge of allegiance by referring to America as “one Nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.”

That is too much power.

Specifically, the court in this case has held that the words “under God” are unconstitutional because they support the existence of God but deny “atheistic concepts.” Unbelievably, the Court has held that this runs counter to the intent of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, because, according to this court, the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment prohibits the government from endorsing any particular religion, including a belief in one God—which the court calls “monotheism”—at the expense of atheism.

Take a look at this Bible, which I hold in my hand. Here it is, the Holy Bible. It is the King James version—King James of England. Here is what it says in Psalm No. 127:

Except the Lord build the House, they labour in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

Those are the words written long before the U.S. Constitution was written—written by wise men in many instances, Solomon, Son of David—long before the Constitution was written, long before the court system was established in these United States. Those are the words:

Except the Lord build the House, they labour in vain that build it.

Hear me, Judges!

In reading the court's decision, I was astonished by the tortured reasoning of the majority as opposed to the lucid opinion recorded by Judge Fernandez, the lone dissenter. In responding to the arguments of the majority, Judge Fernandez did not see fit to hold that the phrase “under God” violates the Constitution of the United States.

How silly, how lucidly silly.

If the schoolchildren of America were to be required to commemorate to memory, as they used to be required to commit many things to memory, the Declaration of Independence, would that ninth circuit judge render such an absurd decision concerning the constitutionality of the Declaration of Independence?

Let's just select three or four phrases from the Declaration of Independence.

The Declaration refers to “Nature's God.” The Declaration also refers to “the Supreme Judge of the world,” meaning God. The Declaration refers to “a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence.” This is the Declaration of Independence. It was not written by Congress in 1954, as the words “under God” were inserted into the pledge. This Constitution was not written then. This Declaration of Independence was not written then. And who wrote it? In the main, it was written by Thomas Jefferson, along with John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Philip Livingston, and one other. But there are at least four or five references to "Providence," to "the Divinity," to "God," to "the Supreme Judge of the world" in the Declaration of Independence.

Now, would the same judge render such a misguided, absurd decision concerning the Declaration of Independence?

Let's see who signed that Declaration of Independence. John Hancock—there are several signers. I will just select a few: John Hancock; George Wythe; Richard Henry Lee; Thomas Jefferson; Benjamin Harrison, who later would become President; Robert Morris, the financier of the American Revolution; Benjamin Rush; Benjamin Franklin; George Clymer; James Wilson of Pennsylvania; Samuel Adams; John Adams; Elbridge Gerry and Roger Sherman. What would they think? What would these signers of the Declaration think?

What would the signers of the Constitution say if they could speak today? What would they say about this pernicious decision we have just read about?

What would Roger Sherman think? What would William Livingston think? I am wondering, if they could speak today, what would they think? What would Benjamin Franklin say? What would Robert Morris think, George Clymer? These are also signers of the Constitution. What would James Wilson think? How about George Read? How about John Dickinson, what would he say—John Dickinson of Delaware, who signed this Constitution?

What would George Washington think? He presided over the Constitutional Convention. What would he say? What would John Rutledge say? What would Charles Cotesworth Pinckney say? What would Charles Pinckney say? What would Pierce Butler say? If they could speak to this—I will use a word that is pretty widely used—god-awful decision, what would they say?

Well, Judge Fernandez said we should recognize "that the religious clauses in the Constitution were not designed to drive religious expression out of public thought; they were simply written to avoid discrimination."

Judge Fernandez acknowledged further, that, "we can run through the litany of tests and concepts which have floated to the surface from time to time." But, he said, "when all is said and done, the danger that the words 'under God' in our Pledge of Allegiance will tend to bring about a theocracy or suppress somebody's beliefs is so minuscule as to be de minimis." He concluded his dissent by finding that there is nothing unconstitutional about the Pledge of Allegiance, because any danger presented to first amendment freedoms by the phrase 'one nation under God' is, in his words, "picayune."

Well, to that, I would say, "Amen."

Mr. President, over my many years in office, I have known other critics, like the majority of this court, who have attacked the words "under God" as they exist in the Pledge of Allegiance. They have implied that the Founding Fathers were essentially "areligious" or "neutral" about religion. Some of these critics even claim the Founding Fathers were antireligious, that they were bent on establishing a completely secular state in which God has no place. These individuals assert that America's fundamental origins are basically devoid of religious meaning, and that this was the intent of the Founding Fathers.

Well, nothing could be further from the truth.

If we read the Federalist essays, if we read other documents, we know that the intent of the Framers was to keep the new government from endorsing or favoring one religion over another. It was never meant to prohibit any voluntary expression of religious faith. I believe that this court's decision is wrongheaded, destructive, and completely contrary to the intent of the Founders of this great Nation. Instead of ensuring freedom of religion in a nation founded in part to guarantee that basic liberty, a literal suffocation of that freedom has been the result. The rights of those who do not believe in a Supreme being are being zealously guarded, to the denigration, I repeat, the denigration, of the rights of the millions of people in this country who do believe.

The American doctrine of separation of church and state forbids the establishment of any particular religion by the state, but it does not forbid the influence of religious values in the life of our Nation. Religious faith has always been a basic tenet of American life. This is evident throughout the history of America.

The history of the first amendment in particular is one of the great legacies of faith bequeathed by the Founding Fathers, but it is one that is little understood and sometimes distorted—as it was in the recent court decision. In 1791, Congress passed the first 10 amendments to the Constitution. We refer to these 10 amendments as the Bill of Rights. The very first amendment recognized the importance of religion in American life, stating that, Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, which the second phrase is just as important and has equal weight with the preceding clause. The purpose of this tenet was to allow religious faith to flourish, not to suppress it, not to hobble it.

In fact, even earlier—before the passage of the First Amendment—Congress had clarified its attitude toward religion when, on August 7, 1789, it officially reenacted the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, which included an explicit endorsement of religion. Article III of the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 stated, "Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of learning shall forever be encouraged."

At that juncture, most schools were church enterprises. Congress recognized this, and expected—and I want to emphasize this—expected that the schools would teach religion and morality.

Against this backdrop, the First Amendment is especially enlightening. James Madison, the principal sponsor of the Bill of Rights and later himself President, was a lifelong Episcopalian who had studied theology at Princeton with apparent plans to enter the ministry. However, on his return to Virginia after college, he changed his mind and went into politics primarily because he was deeply disturbed by the persecution of Baptists and other non-conformists in the Old Dominion. He therefore entered politics to become an ardent advocate of religious tolerance.

Madison declared that, "the religion of every man must be left to the conviction and conscience of every man." Thus, in consultation with John Leland, the leading Baptist clergyman in Virginia, Madison hammered out the church/state principles that were eventually embodied in the first amendment.

As a result, the institutions of Church and State were officially separated, but the exercise of religion and its influence on society were encouraged—not discouraged.

One of the most perceptive observers of the early American scene was the celebrated Alexis de Tocqueville. De Tocqueville, in summarizing the condition of religion in the United States in the 1830s, wrote:

On my arrival in the United States the religious aspect of the country was the first thing that struck my attention . . . In France I had almost always seen the spirit of religion and the spirit of freedom marching in opposite directions.

That is what this court would have us do in this country. But, continued de Tocqueville:

But in America, I found they were intimately united and that they reigned in common over the same country . . . Religion . . . must be regarded as the foremost of the political institutions of the country—

Meaning this country—for if it does not impart a taste for freedom—

We hear the word "freedom" kicked around everywhere today—it facilitates the use of free institutions.

De Tocqueville grasped what millions of Americans have known, past and present. God has been and continues to be an intimate and profound participant in the ongoing history of these United States. Keep that in mind. God has been and continues to be an intimate and profound participant in the ongoing history of America.

Remember the Scriptures: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." The American people believe that.

Through the decades, most Americans have come to discover the truth of de Tocqueville's conclusion when he asserted that, "Unbelief is an accident." Hear that, ye atheists: "Unbelief is an accident, and faith is the only permanent state of mankind."

In the context of this heritage, then, it is not surprising that the United States—a nation that evolved out of the American Revolution—should be, at root, a religious nation, from the beginning, from the Mayflower Compact, which in at least four instances refers to God.

Indeed, most of the men who have been President of the United States have been men of exceptional faith. Two Presidents other than James Madison John Adams and Benjamin Harrison had considered entering the ministry. James Garfield was a lay preacher in the Disciples church. And Theodore Roosevelt, Benjamin Harrison, William McKinley, and James Earl Carter were all Sunday School teachers at various points during their lives.

Of all of the Presidents, Abraham Lincoln was among the most theologically astute and Biblically influenced. Paradoxically, he never formally joined any particular church. Nonetheless, he said the Bible—this is what Lincoln was talking about, the Holy Bible—was "the greatest gift God has given to man." Hear me, Judge Goodwin of the Ninth Circuit. This is Lincoln speaking, not Robert C. Byrd. Lincoln said the Bible was "the greatest gift God has given to man." And he was an avid reader of the Bible. He kept a battered old family Bible with him in the White House, and his speeches were laced with Biblical quotations. Reporters of his day stated that his delivery reflected the cadences and rhythms of the King James Version of the English Bible. The first Bible was the Coverdale Bible, written in 1535, the same year Thomas Moore was executed.

But Lincoln was not alone among the Presidents who bore public witness to their personal faith. Every President, from George Washington through George W. Bush, has included some reference to God in his inaugural address. I have gone through all the inaugural addresses. I think there might have been one President who was pretty weak in his references to the Supreme Judge of the world. But in most cases they didn't have any hesitancy about referring to providence, to God.

In his First Inaugural address, Washington declared, "No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than those of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency." George Washington also instituted another custom that has been followed by every President since, by proclaiming a national day of Thanksgiving in late November of 1789.

Jefferson, specifically included in his plans for the University of Virginia the proposal that "proof of the being of God, the Creator, Preserver, and Supreme Being of the Universe, and Author of all morality, and the laws and obligations these infer, will be the province of the Professor of ethics."

However, nowhere, perhaps, did Jefferson's religious faith have a greater influence than in the words of the Declaration of Independence. At one point, Jefferson wrote, "Religion is the alpha and omega of our moral law." He also pledged that he had "sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." In the Declaration, which he wrote, Jefferson made it clear that religion is not only the root of our moral law but of our political rights. The Declaration of Independence contains five synonyms for the word "God," and maintains that freedom itself is a gift from God as an element of man's being.

As, hopefully, we all recall, the Declaration of Independence states, with respect to God:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness. . . .

We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions. . . .

And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor. . . .

These are various and sundry excerpts from the Declaration of Independence.

Based on this foundation established by Jefferson and the other Founding Fathers, archaeologists in future millennia will have little difficulty reading the evidence of the religious faith and traditions that have been part and parcel of American history. Every nook and cranny of this Capitol—and I might add, of this Capital City—provides such evidence. In fact, wherever one may go in this great national city, he or she is constantly reminded of the strong spiritual awareness of our forefathers who wrote the Constitution, who built the schools, who built the churches, who hewed the forests, who dredged the rivers and harbors, and who created this Republic.

Here in the Senate, for example, the services of an ordained clergyman have been employed since 1789. The Senate

Chaplain is the embodiment of a corporate faith in God and the symbol of the eternal judgment that we Senators recognize exists over our legislative and personal actions. Moreover, the institution of the Senate Chaplaincy is itself the result of a historical process that reveals much about the long development of American values.

For example, the first prayers offered in Congress were uttered on September 7, 1774. At the initial meeting of the First Continental Congress, Samuel Adams requested that the convention begin with prayer. As the Revolutionary War continued, the Continental Congress issued calls for periodic national days of prayer and fasting, asking the populace "to reverence the Providence of God, and look up to Him as the Supreme Disposer of all events and the arbiter of the fate of nations."

These religious expressions were not just pretense, they were not just ceremonial verbiage. Heavens no. Prayer and worship were held in high regard by the remarkable men who led the American Revolution, and the Chaplaincy of today's Senate is derived directly from the guidance provided by those great men. During the rocky sessions of the Constitutional Convention of 1787, the various representatives of the several States were locked in heated disagreement over petty prerogatives with little concern, apparently at that moment, for the national well-being. The weather had been very hot—probably as humid as it gets here in Washington at times—and the delegates to the Convention were tired and they were edgy. The debates were stymied and a melancholy cloud seemed to hang over the Convention.

Suddenly, old Dr. Franklin stood to his feet and faced the chair in which sat GEN George Washington. His famous double-spectacles were low on his nose, and he broke the silence when he addressed George Washington. Franklin reminded the Convention how, at the beginning of the war with England, the Continental Congress had prayed for Divine protection in that very room. "Our prayers, sir, were heard," he declared. "They were graciously answered. . . ." He then asked, "And have we now forgotten that powerful Friend? Or do we imagine that we no longer need His assistance?"

He continued on saying:

I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid?

We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writings, that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

He selected the same portion of Scripture that I picked today, didn't he? This is Benjamin Franklin talking. He went on to say:

I firmly believe this: and I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel. . . .

Well, today, we follow the Senate tradition of morning prayer. The Chaplain was among the first officers elected in the Senate upon adoption of the Constitution. In my volumes, "The Senate 1789-1989," Senators will find a chapter on the Senate Chaplain. I hope they will read it again. To this very day, the first daily order of the business in the Senate is a prayer for Divine Guidance by the Chaplain.

This, of course, was not perceived by the Framers as an attack on the first amendment requiring separation between church and state, for the simple reason that no single church has anything to do with it.

It is not simply prayer in the Senate that reaffirms the religious history of the American people. Let us speak briefly of some of the other reminders in Washington that reaffirm the proposition that our country is founded on religious principles.

On the Washington Monument, one may read three Biblical quotations on the 24th landing. One was donated by the Sunday school children of the Methodist Church of Philadelphia who contributed a stone bearing an inscription from the Book of Proverbs which states:

Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

Another inscription on the Washington Monument, which was contributed by the Methodist Church of New York, is also taken from Proverbs and reads:

The memory of the just is blessed.

That comes from chapter 22 of Proverbs, verse 6.

And the third stone bears these words of Christ from the Book of Luke:

Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

Near the Washington Monument, of course, is the Lincoln Memorial. This massive shrine pays homage to the greatness of this simple and heroic man whose very life was offered on the altar of liberty. We know of his knowledge of the Bible and his gentleness, his power, his determination, and we know that determination of Lincoln came to us clearly through his features chiseled in granite by the sculptor.

We can almost hear Lincoln speak the words which are cut into the wall by his side. Mr. President, we need to get some stonemasons to go down to the Lincoln Memorial. If this judge with his pernicious ruling and if the atheists are successful in having these words stricken from this Chamber—"In God We Trust"—and from the Nation's currency, we will have to have a lot of new dollar bills printed and a lot of new coins. We have to strike those words "In God We Trust" now from the bills if these pernicious suits by atheists are upheld by some misguided judges, like the one who rendered this decision. We had better hire some stonemasons. That might be a pretty good job, come to think of it. Maybe I should just retire at the end of this term—I would be about 89 then—and then I can perhaps get myself a job as a stonemason. I could go down here to the Lincoln Monument—I would not do it—at least I could think in terms of being a stonemason and take these words off that Lincoln Memorial.

Listen to what Lincoln says, according to the inscription on the Lincoln Memorial. Can you just witness those stonemasons going down there and chipping with chisel and hammer, chipping out these words? Listen, these are words that are cut into the wall by the side of Lincoln on the Lincoln Memorial:

That this Nation under God—

Praise God, hallelujah, there they are. That is Lincoln, that is what he said.

That this Nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom. . . .

Hear that, judges of the Ninth Circuit. Hear that, Judge Goodwin of the Ninth Circuit. I have a great judge in West Virginia named Goodwin. He is a Federal judge. He is Judge Goodwin. But I daresay he would not have rendered that kind of a foolish decision. Here are the words that are cut into the wall by the side of Lincoln:

That this Nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

In his second inaugural address, this great President—a Republican, by the way. See, I do not hold that against him—in his great second inaugural address, great President Lincoln made use of the words "God," "Bible," "prayer," "providence," "Almighty," and "divine attributes," and then his address continues:

As was said 3,000 years ago so it still must be said, [that] "the judgements of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

That was Abraham Lincoln.

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God—

This is Lincoln talking, Abraham Lincoln talking—

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the brunt of the battle and for his widow and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and all nations.

Before leaving Washington, a visitor might make a final stop at the National Cemetery in Arlington, VA. Here are the peaceful ranks of crosses, stars of David, other religious symbols reminding us that our Government has given its fallen men back to the God who gave them life. The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier stands for all those who have fallen in battle who could not be identified—members of all sects, faiths, and religions. And here, once more, we find the acknowledgment of God's divine power in the eloquent words:

Here lies in honored glory, an American soldier known but to God.

Can you imagine, we may have to someday get stonemasons to go over there and take hammers and chisels and take those words off that monument.

Thus, the connection between God and the United States of America is long established in the minds of most Americans. If we begin now to erase the connection between God and schoolchildren under the pretense of protecting the so-called constitutional rights of nonbelievers or atheists, as the Ninth Circuit did, will it not be necessary to go a little further, or perhaps a great deal further, in the future?

Will we next be forced to remove the name of God from all official documents, historic edifices, and patriotic events for fear of possibly offending what is a nonbelieving minority?

Must we do so when even the possibility of offending such a minority is, in the words of Judge Fernandez, picaresque?

What will the court crier say—"God save this honorable court"? He will have to stop there, will he not? He will have to say something else. Would he say, "President Bush save this honorable court?" Would he say, "President Clinton, save this honorable court?" One can see how silly such a decision was and how foolish it is to pursue that line in this country with all of its history.

Obviously, in establishing and maintaining a secular government, the American people never intended to foster an atheistic or a faithless society. In this light, in closing, I recite perhaps more sincerely than ever the prayer that climaxes one of our greatest national hymns:

Our fathers' God to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by Thy might,
Great God our King.

INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Nation will honor its birthday on the forthcoming July 4. That was the day on which, in 1826, both Thomas Jefferson and John Adams died. They both died on the same day, 50 years exactly from the date on which Thomas Jefferson wrote that Declaration of Independence and the Congress approved it. What a coincidence. God works in miraculous ways, his wonders to perform, does not he?

As I look forward to that Fourth of July, I know the Senate will not be in session. But before we depart, I want to talk about the event that Senators and Members of the other body will be celebrating next week back in their home States and districts: Independence Day.

As I think of Independence Day, I think of Henry Van Dyke's poem, "America For Me."

'Tis fine to see the Old World, and travel up and down

Among the famous palaces and cities of renown,

To admire the crumbly castles and the statues of the kings,—

But now I think I've had enough of antiquated things.

So it's home again, and home again, America for me!

My heart is turning home again, and there I long to be,

In the land of youth and freedom beyond the ocean bars,

Where the air is full of sunlight and the flag is full of stars.

Oh, London is a man's town, there's power in the air;

And Paris is a woman's town, with flowers in her hair;

And it's sweet to dream in Venice, and it's great to study in Rome;

But when it comes to living there is no place like home.

I like the German fir-woods, in green battalions drilled;

I like the gardens of Versailles with flashing fountains filled;

But, oh, to take your hand, my dear, and ramble for a day;

In the friendly western woodland where nature has her way!

I know that Europe's wonderful, yet something seems to lack:

The Past is too much with her, and the people looking back.

But the glory of the Present it is to make the Future free,—

We love our land for what she is and what she is to be.

Oh, it's home again, and home again, America for me!

I want a ship that's westward bound to plough the rolling sea,

To the blessed Land of Room Enough beyond the ocean bars,

Where the air is full of sunlight and the flag is full of stars.

I will think of America in the context of Henry Van Dyke's beautiful poem, "America For Me." I am not referring to the movie of several years ago. No one will be battling any alien invasions. Rather, we will participate in that most American of all holidays, all birthdays certainly, celebrating the founding of this Nation on July 4, 1776. That was 226 years ago.

Our Nation's birthday party is a time for picnics, ice cream, parades, and fireworks. It is a time for family and friends to gather under the shade of the biggest and the oldest tree around, camped out in lawn chairs and on blankets with sweating glasses of cold drinks in hand, watching, laughing, as children run through the lawn sprinklers—ha, ha. What a joy that was, to run through those lawn sprinklers. These pages have enjoyed those things. We did not have lawn sprinklers when I was a boy, but I knew the joy of the summer rain.

So while these children are running through the lawn and enjoying the lawn sprinklers, our minds will shift to hotdogs. When the evening shadows gather and the fireflies begin their display, it is time to pull out the sparklers and watch the fireworks. Small children then, like my granddaughters, like my great granddaughter, will nestle against parents or grandparents or great grandparents. They are made timid by the loud booms and shrill shrieks of the big rockets, but their shyness is soon forgotten as the enormous chrysanthemum bursts of red, gold, green, and blue burst forth against the dark sky.

I can see it from McLean. I can look toward Washington and see these enormous chrysanthemums of fireworks, these bursts of gold, red, yellow, and blue as they burst against the dark sky. Only when the show is over do small heads and sticky hands hang limp against a parent's shoulder for a long, sleepy walk back to the car and then home.

Many holidays touch deep wellsprings of feeling in Americans. Memorial Day and Veterans Day play upon our heartstrings like the melancholy sigh of a violin, calling up visions of heroism and sacrifice, of the tears and loss and suffering that are sadly necessary parts of defending our nation, our people, and our freedom. Columbus Day sounds a bright note of discovery and optimism, the shining promise of new worlds. Flag Day foreshadows the patriotism of Independence Day, but no other holiday brings out such affection and pride in our nation and the ideals upon which it is based. It is as if the July sun heats the deep strong current that flows through this nation and brings it to the surface, each year as strong and fresh as ever, as powerful as it was in 1776.

July 4, 1776 was probably much like July 4, 2002 will be: hot, sunny, sticky with humidity in the South and East, dry in the West, but in 1776, the air would have been thick with tension. The colonies' ties with England were tearing apart. The previous year, on July 6, 1775, the Congress had issued a "Declaration of the Causes and Necessity of Taking Up Arms," which detailed American grievances while explicitly denying any intention of separating from Great Britain. King George responded by proclaiming a state of rebellion in the colonies, and Parliament passed an act that cut off colonial trade.

Since January of 1776, everyone had been reading and talking about the then-anonymous pamphlet, "Common Sense," that so eloquently argued for independence. Rebel forces were fighting, and winning, battles against British forces at Lexington, Concord, Fort Ticonderoga, Breed's Hill, and around Boston. A lot of things going on around Boston. Unable to conscript sufficient forces, King George had resorted to hiring mercenary soldiers from Germany the "Hessians." In May, King Louis XVI of France secretly authorized arms and munitions shipments to the Americans. In June 1776 the Continental Congress appointed a committee to compose a declaration of independence.

On June 28, 1776, American forces in Charleston, South Carolina, fought off a British attack, but on July 2, British General Sir William Howe landed an army that would reach 32,000 troops, including 9,000 Hessian mercenaries, at Staten Island, New York. The same day, Congress voted for independence. Two days later in Philadelphia, on the evening of July 4, the Declaration of Independence was adopted when John Hancock, president of the Congress, signed the final draft copy.

Composed primarily by one man, Thomas Jefferson, with changes made by after debate among the Congress, parts of the Declaration of Independence are well known to many Americans. Many people can recite the opening words—"When, in the course of human events * * *"—and more can recite the first line of the second paragraph: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these, are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." After that, sadly, Americans' knowledge of the substance of the Declaration drops off sharply. I hope that perhaps some parents will read the Declaration of Independence to their children this July fourth. Or some children will read the Declaration of Independence to their parent, on this 4th. The litany of wrongs inflicted upon the colonists by the British crown, designed to incite rebellion, still retains the power to inflame our passions. The actual declaration that follows, in the last paragraph of the document, is by contrast, firm and solemn, a straightforward and almost lawyerly assertion of separation from the Crown.

At the signing of the Declaration, which occurred on August 2, 1776, John Hancock was reported to have urged unanimity, saying "There must be no pulling different ways. We must hang together." To which Benjamin Franklin, with his usual wit, is said to have retorted, "Yes, we must indeed all hang together, or most assuredly we shall all hang separately." Gallows humor aside, Franklin's words were true. Failure on the part of the signatories to make the Declaration of Independence a reality would, for these men, mean losing not just a war, but their homes, their possessions, and, in all likelihood, their lives. These men were committing treason. Think about that. These men were committing treason. They were putting their lives, their honor, their sacred honor, on the altar.

They were putting everything they had on the line. The final words of the Declaration could not have been lightly written: "And, for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor." In the months ahead, American defeats at the battles of Long Island, White Plains, and Fort Lee may have made a few signers wish that they had not been swayed by Hancock's plea. Indeed, by September of 1777, the British under Howe had driven Washington's army toward Philadelphia, forcing Congress to flee the city. On September 26, 1777, Howe's forces occupied the city where the Declaration of Independence was signed.

The Revolutionary War continued for six more difficult years, until a preliminary peace treaty was signed in Paris. Congress would not declare a formal end to the war until April 11, 1783. The Treaty of Paris formally ending the war was signed on September 3, 1783 and ratified by Congress in January 1784.

Mr. President, I think it is good to remind ourselves of these things from time to time. And remember those men who were willing to sign their names on the line, committing to the cause their lives—their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor. What would you have given for their lives had they not won that war? They were putting their lives on the line. They were committing treason. What a chance they took—for us. For us!

It is difficult today, accustomed as we are to automobiles, air conditioning, electricity, mobile phones and instant communications, to imagine what those years of war must have been like. Weeks might pass before you heard or read, by candlelight on a hot summer's night, about a decisive battle in a spot that might take you weeks to reach on horseback. Imagine life as a Revolutionary soldier: a wool uniform if you were lucky, and some French powder and ammunition hanging at your waist while you walk in the middle of long, dust-covered column between battles, carrying your three-foot-long, very heavy musket over your shoulder. I can see those boys from Vermont, can't you? In the hills of New Hampshire, Boston—can't you see them, plodding along from Lexington on to Concord?

In the winter you might have a tent to protect you from the winter, not nearly enough to eat. You might get paid only sporadically. Most of us could not do that for a weekend, let alone for six years.

This Independence Day, America is at the beginning of what promises to be another kind of war—a war against terrorism. It, too, will be fought on our territory as well as at points far distant from us. It will require the same kind of resolve and commitment, and the same reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, that our Founding Fathers showed. But next week, as we celebrate 226 years spent enjoying the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, of freedom from tyranny, I am confident that Americans will demonstrate the same fortitude and bravery that our Founding Fathers displayed. Our ideals are too deeply ingrained in us to be lightly given up.

I close with the words from Longfellow's poem, "The Building Of the Ship":

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What Workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Where shaped the anchors of thy hope!
Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'T is of the wave and not the rock;
'T is but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee,—are all with thee!

THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE DECISION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to express my outrage at the decision reached by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Newdow v. U.S. Congress, in which a three-judge panel held that schoolchildren's recitation of the phrase "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance violates the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. This case is the result of yet another attempt by the radical left to wipe away public references to God, and is an unconscionable act of judicial activism. I hope that the Ninth Circuit's decision will ultimately be reversed on appeal, allowing reason and common sense to prevail.

Simply put, there is no support in the law for this ruling, even in the Ninth Circuit's own jurisprudence. The phrase "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance is very similar to the use of "In God We Trust" on currency and as the national motto, which has been repeatedly upheld by the courts. In Aronow v. United States, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the phrase does not violate the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. The court said, "Its use is of a patriotic or ceremonial character and bears no true resemblance to a governmental sponsorship of a religious exercise." It also said that "it is quite obvious" that the phrase "has nothing whatsoever to do with the establishment of religion."

While the Ninth Circuit is the most relevant here because of Wednesday's ruling, other circuit courts have reached the same conclusion. The Tenth Circuit explained in Gaylor v. United States that the national motto "through historical usage and ubiquity cannot be reasonably understood to convey government approval of religious belief." In cases such as Lynch v. Donnelly, the Supreme Court has indicated its approval of these rulings. Even Justice William Brennan, one of the most liberal Supreme Court justices of the modern era and one of the most strident advocates for the separation of church and state, indicated his support for this view, saying that Americans have "simply interwoven the motto so deeply into the fabric of our civil polity" as to eliminate constitutional problems.

The same reasoning applies to the phrase "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance. The use of this phrase simply indicates the important role that religion plays in America, but it does not establish a religion or endorse a religious belief.

It is also significant that even when the Supreme Court ruled in Engel v. Vitale that organized prayer is unconstitutional in public schools, the Court made it clear that the case did not apply to patriotic slogans or ceremonial anthems that refer to God. While I have always viewed this case as misguided, and have for years introduced a constitutional amendment to reverse it, even this case supports the use of phrases, such as "under God" and "God Bless America," as part of our civic vocabulary.

The fact is that religion is central to our culture and our patriotic identity as a nation. As the Supreme Court said in Lynch v. Donnelly, there is "an unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life."

I am pleased my colleagues have denounced this ruling. Throughout the history of this great Nation, we have invoked the blessings of God without establishing religion. From prayers before legislative assembly meetings and invocations before college football games to the national motto on our currency, our Constitution has allowed references to God.

I would also like to say a few words about the Ninth Circuit. Several years ago, it was suggested that the Ninth Circuit be broken up. I think that it is time to reconsider that proposal. The Supreme Court reverses the Ninth Circuit at a much higher rate than other circuits, indicating the activist propensities of this circuit. Simply put, the Ninth Circuit is out of the mainstream, and the decision in Newdow underscores that fact. It is unhealthy for our democracy when one circuit routinely refuses to follow the law. During the last six years, the Supreme Court has reversed 80–90% of Ninth Circuit cases reviewed. While the Supreme Court corrects the Ninth Circuit often, it cannot do so on every questionable ruling, and this allows the establishment of dangerous precedents.

I am particularly concerned about Wednesday's ruling because one of the judges who joined in the majority opinion was Judge Stephen Reinhardt, whose own confirmation process was marked by controversy in 1980. I served as Ranking Member of the Judiciary Committee at the time, and I expressed serious concern over Judge Reinhardt's fitness to serve as a Federal judge. He was extremely active in politics and known for his very liberal views. Judge Reinhardt's major area of practice was labor law, and there was a question as to whether he had sufficient experience. His record, in my view, called into question his ability to serve as an impartial judge. During his tenure of the Ninth Circuit, Judge Reinhardt has been reversed an alarming number of times. He was reversed 11 times during the 1996–97 term, and he holds the record for unanimous reversals in one term.

I mention the matter of Judge Reinhardt's controversial past only to address his fitness as a Federal judge. This question is legitimate because circuit judges make important decisions that affect a lot of people. In the Ninth Circuit case, Judge Reinhardt helped create law that is dangerous in its precedent and unsound in its reasoning.

Mr. President, once again I want to state unequivocally that the Ninth Circuit made a poor decision in the Newdow case. I hope that this decision will alert all Americans to the dangerous judicial activism that plagues the Ninth Circuit. Furthermore, I hope that this case is reversed on appeal, so that many more generations of schoolchildren will proudly learn the Pledge of Allegiance.

HIGH FRUCTOSE CORN SYRUP ANTITRUST DECISION

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to bring to the Senate's attention a recent decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, written by Judge Richard Posner, in the case of In Re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, found at 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 11940. Judge Posner's unanimous opinion, joined by Circuit Judges William Bauer and Michael Kanne, articulates in clear, cogent, and unequivocal language the standard for the Federal courts in the Seventh Circuit to follow in deciding whether circumstantial evidence of price-fixing or tacit collusion should be presented to a jury in antitrust cases. This is a much needed improvement in the state of the law, and I hope that it will soon be followed in other circuits as well.

Last month, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, which I chair, completed a 10-month investigation into the reasons why gasoline prices fluctuate so dramatically and why retail gasoline prices seem to go up and down together at so many gas stations. The majority staff issued a comprehensive 400-page report explaining our findings, and we then held 2 days of hearings on the report.

I will not summarize the entire report here, but I would urge anyone interested in how gasoline prices are set to visit the subcommittee's Web site, where the report can be downloaded.

I would like to highlight, however, several of the issues the subcommittee examined that are directly relevant to the Seventh Circuit's decision. First, the subcommittee found that in several of our domestic gasoline markets where there is little competition a few oil companies have sufficient market power to raise the price of gasoline through their decisions on how much gasoline to produce.

The subcommittee examined retail prices in several geographic markets. The subcommittee found at various times in these markets the prices of the major brands of gasoline followed a "ribbon-like" pattern. The prices of these brands moved up and down together, usually by about the same amount each day, and they maintained a constant difference in price with respect to each other.

The documents reviewed by the subcommittee indicate that the marketing practices of the various gasoline wholesalers and retailers in the market contribute to this pricing pattern. First, the major brands usually seek to maintain a constant price difference with respect to one or more other brands that are considered the major competition or the price leader in that market. Second, the market strategy of the major brands generally is to maintain market share, and avoid costly price wars which do not result in greater margins for all of the firms competing in the market. Thus, most of the major brands establish their retail price simply by following the price movements of one or more other brands. They do not attempt to undercut their rivals; rather they seek to maintain their relative competitive position with respect to their rivals.

Another strategy supporting the ribbon-like retail price pattern is the influence the refiners maintain over the retail price. Major brand refiners usually set the wholesale price paid by their dealers on the basis of surveys of the retail prices of competitors; the refiner then subtracts an amount considered to be an adequate margin for the retailer, and charges the retailer for the remainder. In this manner, the dealers receive a fixed margin for their gasoline, and the benefits and costs of retail price changes accrue to the refiner rather than the dealer. In reality, therefore, a few refiners rather than many individual dealers set the retail price of gasoline for the major brands.

The resulting retail pricing pattern—the ribbon-like pattern—is exactly the same pattern one would expect to see in a market where there is some type of collusion between the firms in the market. In a collusive marketplace, each firm has an agreed-upon market share, and the relative prices of the different brands are fixed.

By itself, parallel pricing does not indicate collusion. Parallel pricing can develop in a competitive market, as each firm strives independently to obtain some advantage from a movement in price, only to be matched by its competitors who seek to deny that firm any such advantage.

Hence, to establish that firms in a market are colluding with one another, it is necessary to demonstrate more than just the existence of parallel or interdependent pricing. A plaintiff, or the government, as the case may be, must establish either an explicit agreement on pricing, or present sufficient circumstantial evidence indicating a tacit agreement on pricing.

It is rare to find in the modern age, with many corporations well-schooled in the antitrust laws, and legions of lawyers eager to educate those who are not, to find an express agreement to fix prices or restrict supply. Moreover, in markets most susceptible to price-fixing those with few firms, a high degree of concentration, homogeneous products, and high barriers to entry, such as the gasoline market—express collusion is totally unnecessary to carry out the purposes of any such conspiracy. In highly concentrated markets, the few firms can observe each other's behavior, determine how they react to various strategies, and react accordingly. After a while, the firms in these markets can develop patterns of behavior that are as non competitive as if an actual agreement had been reached.

The problem, therefore, is how to determine whether certain market activity is the natural result of the structure of the market and purely independent decisionmaking, or is the result of some tacit agreement or understanding or agreed-upon practices that restrict competition.

Again, rarely will there be a "smoking gun" document pointing out the existence of tacit collusion. The best way—and in reality the only way to determine whether in fact such collusion exists is to look at all of the evidence regarding the marketplace and the behavior of the firms in the market. For example, are the companies acting independently? To what extent and how do they communicate with each other? To what extent do they have agreements between themselves on terms of sale, supply, storage, or transportation? To what extent do they share information? To what extent do they pursue innovation independently?

At the subcommittee's hearings we heard testimony from several attorneys general, knowledgeable in the antitrust laws, including Attorney General Jennifer Granholm from my home State of Michigan, that the standards used by the courts in recent years have become unduly stringent for plaintiffs seeking to present evidence of tacit collusion to a jury in an antitrust case. Many courts have been requiring plaintiffs in price-fixing cases to present evidence that it was more likely than not that the conduct complained of was the result of collusion before the evidence would be presented to the jury. In effect, this standard delegates to the judge on a motion for summary judgment the determination of the basic factual issues that are normally the province of a jury. Furthermore, it essentially requires the plaintiff to present evidence amounting to a "smoking gun" demonstrating collusion in order to survive a motion for summary judgment by the defendants. This standard thus prevents many cases that should be presented to a jury from ever getting to the jury.

Judge Posner's opinion in the High Fructose Corn Syrup case clarifies the law of the Seventh Circuit that economic evidence and other evidence indicating firms in a market have an agreement—either tacit or explicit—not to compete should be presented to a jury. The opinion clearly states that in a price-fixing case the question of "whether, when the evidence was considered as a whole, it was more likely that the defendants had conspired to fix prices than that they had not conspired to fix prices" should be presented to a jury, and that the antitrust laws do not establish a higher threshold for surviving motions for summary judgment than other types of cases. The plaintiff need not present one single item that demonstrates an agreement; rather the plaintiff need only demonstrate that the evidence as a whole more likely than not shows an agreement.

Several weeks ago, following the subcommittee's hearing, I wrote a letter to the Federal Trade Commission informing them of the subcommittee's findings, and urging the FTC to take a number of actions to improve the competitiveness of the gasoline refining and marketing industry.

One of the points I stressed to the FTC was that "In concentrated markets juries should be permitted to consider circumstantial evidence in determining whether or not the firms in the market are acting in collusion. In highly concentrated markets, outright conspiracies and collusion between the market participants are totally unnecessary to develop concerted action. When there are few firms in a market, these firms can easily track and follow each other's behavior. In reality, the only way to demonstrate collusion in a concentrated market is through circumstantial evidence."

The Seventh Circuit has now established this principle as law. I commend the Seventh Circuit for this clarification and hope that other circuits will follow.

I ask unanimous consent that my letter to the FTC be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, June 6, 2002.

Hon. TIMOTHY J. MURIS,
Chairman, Federal Trade Commission, Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN MURIS: I am writing to follow-up on several issues raised in the recent report of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, "Gas Prices: How Are They Really Set?," and the Subcommittee's hearings on this subject.

One of our central findings is that the increasing concentration in the petroleum refining industry has exacerbated the factors that cause price spikes. This has led to sharp increases in prices and an unprecedented level of volatility in a number of gasoline markets in the past several years. Because of the importance of petroleum in America today, gasoline price spikes can significantly harm the national economy.

During our investigation and at the hearing we examined a variety of proposals for reducing this volatility. I am pleased that the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has been proceeding with its own study of the reasons for the volatility in gasoline prices and, as you stated in your remarks at the second public conference on this subject, will closely study our report and hearing record during your review. I nonetheless would like to take this opportunity to highlight some of the areas we examined that I believe deserve serious attention during your overall review and as the FTC reviews proposed mergers in the oil industry.

VERTICALLY INTEGRATED MARKETS

The Majority Staff report and testimony at the Subcommittee's hearings addressed a number of problems that arise when there is a high degree of vertical integration in highly concentrated markets. In such markets, refiners have little incentive to lower wholesale prices, and retailers have limited ability to shop around for lower wholesale prices. The current situation on the West Coast also demonstrates that a high degree of vertical integration in a highly concentrated market poses substantial barriers to entry for other firms seeking to enter either the wholesale or retail market, including very high barriers to imports.

Professors Preston McAfee and Justine Hastings, both of whom testified at our hearings, have extensively studied the effects of vertical integration in concentrated markets. Their work indicates that mergers between two vertically integrated firms in highly concentrated wholesale and retail markets may be more detrimental to competition, through interdependent interactions between the integrated markets, than a straightforward analysis of the increase in concentration in each of those separate markets might indicate. For example, in looking at the California market, Professors Hastings and Richard Gilbert found "evidence in a broad panel that vertical integration matters for upstream retail prices and that wholesale prices tend to be higher in markets with large vertically integrated firms." I urge you to seriously examine and consider these findings and the work of Professor McAfee in this same area.

INVENTORIES

The increasingly tight balance between supply and demand in gasoline markets—including the reduced levels of crude oil and gasoline in inventories—is one of the prime factors underlying the recent volatility. In a tightly balanced market, even the slightest disruption in supply, such as a pipeline break or an unplanned refinery outage, will lead to a sharp increase in price due to the inelasticity in the demand for gasoline.

Most oil companies today have adopted just-in-time inventory practices. Although from each company's perspective these practices may minimize day-to-day operational costs, in the aggregate this has eliminated the refining industry's cushion or "insurance" against price spikes resulting from minor disruptions in the refining, distribution, and marketing system. It also has created a perverse incentive for refiners. The Subcommittee found documents indicating that a number of refiners prefer a market that is vulnerable to disruptions so they could take advantage of the higher prices that follow any disruption.

In reviewing proposed mergers, the FTC should carefully examine the potential effects upon the aggregate inventories that would be created as a result of the merger. The FTC should consider requiring companies seeking to merge to ensure that the aggregate inventories that would be maintained after the merger would not be less than, and perhaps even greater than, the aggregate inventories prior to the merger. This would ensure that increasing concentration would not further exacerbate one of the factors leading to price spikes.

PIPELINE AND TERMINAL CAPACITY

The history of the Wolverine Pipeline in Michigan, as recounted in the Subcommittee's report, demonstrates how control of critical transportation and storage facilities are a less visible but very effective way to influence cost, supplies, and market prices. The Wolverine case demonstrated that parties who control the transportation and storage facilities can take advantage of the complexity of the laws and regulations to circumvent the requirements of the law and limit competition in the market.

According to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), the Wolverine Pipeline violated the Interstate Commerce Act for approximately twenty years in the manner in which it allowed access and established tariffs for shipments over the pipeline. With the intervention of the Michigan Attorney General, one small, independent company, Quality Oil, successfully challenged Wolverine's practices and obtained its rightful access to the pipeline. Quality Oil's access to the Wolverine Pipeline at non-discriminatory tariffs will benefit consumers in Michigan by increasing the supply of gasoline to independent dealers at competitive prices.

The Quality Oil/Wolverine Pipeline case demonstrates the importance of the mission of agencies such as the FERC and the FTC in ensuring there is fair competition in the marketplace. In markets in which a dominant player controls the transportation and storage of a product such as gasoline, I urge the FTC to use its available authorities to ensure that this market power is not abused. Similarly, in reviewing proposed mergers, the FTC should ensure that the proposed merger does not create any new barriers to entry into a market through a lack of access to pipelines and terminals.

REFINING CAPACITY

As you are aware, approximately half of the refineries in the United States have closed over the past twenty years. This has resulted in a decline in the aggregate amount of refining capacity, as well as increasing concentration in the refining industry. There are a variety of reasons for this increase in concentration, including the phase-out of federal subsidies that benefitted smaller refiners, increasing capital costs for refinery operation due to more stringent environmental regulations, economies of scale, and mergers within the oil industry. One of the Subcommittee's central findings is that in a number of markets this increase in concentration has exacerbated the factors that lead to price spikes.

In several recent mergers the FTC has required the divestiture of refining assets to preserve competition in the wholesale market. The Subcommittee received testimony that the divestiture of refining assets to firms that were much less capitalized than the divesting firm has contributed to the decline in inventories, as these less capitalized firms are less able to carry inventories. I urge you to review whether the divestitures the FTC has required have had the intended effect of preserving competition, or whether, in view of experience to date, additional conditions upon mergers or divestitures of assets are necessary to fully preserve competition in the refining industry.

MORATORIUM ON MERGERS

At the Subcommittee's hearing, the Attorneys General from the States of Connecticut and Michigan recommended that a one-year moratorium be placed on all major mergers within highly concentrated markets in the oil industry. The purpose of the moratorium would be to enable the Congress to consider more effective remedies to the problems arising from increasing concentration and allow the FTC to consider this problem as well. I am enclosing for your consideration a copy of the statement of Attorney General Blumenthal in support of this moratorium.

PARALLEL PRICING

The Subcommittee also received testimony on what the appropriate burden of proof should be in order to establish illegal collusion under the antitrust laws. The Attorneys General testified that the standard currently used by many courts presents too high a hurdle for plaintiffs in antitrust cases to present their evidence to a jury.

In concentrated markets juries should be permitted to consider circumstantial evidence in determining whether or not the firms in the market are acting in collusion. In highly concentrated markets, outright conspiracies and collusion between the market participants are totally unnecessary to develop concerted action. When there are few firms in a market, these firms can easily track and follow each other's behavior. In reality, the only way to demonstrate collusion in a concentrated market is through circumstantial evidence.

We found numerous instances of parallel pricing within the gasoline industry. At certain times in certain markets, all of the major brands went up and down together, and stayed at a constant differential with respect to each other. Although parallel pricing in and of itself does not necessarily indicate collusion, I believe that additional circumstantial evidence should be considered by a jury in determining whether in fact such collusion exists in concentrated markets.

I therefore support the standard set forth in In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432 (9th Cir. 1990), cert denied, 500 U.S. 959 (1991), in determining whether the plaintiff's circumstantial evidence of collusion can be presented to the jury.

IMPORTANCE OF INDEPENDENTS IN GASOLINE MARKETS

Numerous studies have demonstrated the importance of independent gasoline refiners and dealers in preserving competition in the gasoline wholesale and retail markets. For example, in one of the most rigorous studies to date, which is cited in the Subcommittee's report, Professor Hastings documented how the loss of one independent retail chain in Southern California led to across-the-board price increases at the pump in the areas previously served by the chain. In addition, the Subcommittee's investigation found a number of industry analyses indicating that the greater the presence of non-majors in a specific market, the lower the retail price.

The continuing decline of independents nationwide and in a number of markets presents a significant concern that prices in the affected markets will rise above purely competitive levels. In your reviews of proposed mergers I urge you to carefully examine the effect of the proposed merger upon the presence of independents in the market. Not only are large retail chains necessary to present effective competition for other large retail chains, but a healthy independent sector is necessary to maintain true price competition.

In this context, I urge you or the FTC staff to meet with the Association of Merger Dealers and seriously consider their proposal for the purchase of up to 17 Mobil-branded retail sites currently owned by Phillips/Tosco, which were acquired by Tosco under the consent decree in the Exxon-Mobil merger. In my opinion, it would be worthwhile for the FTC to consider this proposal as a test case to see whether the divestiture of gasoline stations owned by major brands to the dealers rather than to other major brands can be an effective way to inject competition into markets where a proposed merger would be detrimental to competition.

In closing, I would like to thank you and the FTC staff for the support provided to the Subcommittee during this investigation. Our extensive requests for documents were responded to in a timely manner, and the FTC personnel were readily available to answer the Subcommittee's questions. I look forward to continuing our productive working relationship in this and other issues.

Should you have comments regarding this letter, please feel free to contact me or have your staff contact Dan Berkovitz or Laura Stuber, Counsels to the Subcommittee, at 224-9505. Again, thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

CARL LEVIN,
Chairman, Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HONORING MELISSA BYERS OF LEAWOOD, KS

• Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, today I am pleased to honor Melissa Byers of Leawood, KS, for her impressive essay, "Determining the Role of Peacekeeping in a Global Age." This essay won first place in a State-level competition in the 15th Annual National Peace Essay Contest sponsored by the United States Institute of Peace. She received a $1,000 college scholarship, and is competing for national awards of up to $10,000. Melissa is a high school student at Blue Valley North High School in Overland Park, KS.

Melissa sets an incredible example for all students in our country. Melissa came into my office and I met with her to extend my congratulations on her accomplishments. I would like to submit her essay into the RECORD and recognize her fine work.

The United States Institute of Peace is an organization created and funded by Congress to promote research, education, and training on the resolution of international conflicts. This National Peace Essay Contest is one of the Institute's oldest activities to promote civic education on international peace for students across the United States. I would like to commend the Institute of Peace and Melissa Byers for their participation.

Mr. President, I ask that Melissa's essay be printed in the RECORD.

The essay follows:

DETERMINING THE ROLE OF PEACEKEEPING IN A GLOBAL AGE

(By Melissa Byers)

Throughout the history of the United States, we have adapted foreign policy to meet the unique challenges of the times. Past US foreign policies of imperialism, expansionism, and isolationism were adapted in ways representing a narrow national interest. But global conflicts such as those moderated by the current United Nations missions to the Central Africa Republic, Sierra Leone, and Kosovo, not withstanding the huge ramifications of September 11, require a new foreign policy perspective. The collapse of the Soviet Union effectively ended the Cold War, bringing with it the possibility and the necessity of recognizing that the old order is past and a new order is required. By examining the traditional roles of the military and exploring several case studies, the issues surrounding national policy come more clearly into focus, and we can better begin to formulate and redefine a new way of thinking about the peacekeeping role of the United States military and our national interest.

Much has been written about the traditional role of the military, and protecting the homeland is a foundational context in defining the role of the military. Erwin A. Schmidl, a historian for the Austrian Ministry of Defense defines five types of peacetime military operations (1) frontier operations, (2) colonial interventions and counterinsurgency, (3) occupational duties, (4) peacekeeping military operations, and (5) multinational operations (Sismanidis 1). This theory can certainly be applied to U.S. history. In frontier operations, the presence of US military was a stabilizing influence in fulfillment of Manifest Destiny. The US military in putting down the Filipino insurrection of 1901 was an example of colonial interventions and counterinsurgency operations, and the US post-WW II occupation of Germany and Japan in deterring the rise of militant forces was an example of occupational duties. The presence of forces in Haiti in trying to maintain political and economic stability is an example of peacekeeping military operations, and the recent NATO interventions in the old Yugoslavia in preventing ethnic cleansing and genocide is an example of multinational operations. The common thread of national protectionism underpins all five roles, formulating the traditional groundwork for the post-WW II definition of peacekeeping.

The timeliness of this essay is evident in the ashes and aftermath of September 11. With the physical destruction of the two World Trade Towers also came down the ideological pillars of an inviolable and invincible United States. Traditionally, wars have been fought between known enemies and specific military targets. The profile of the enemy was defined. But with the fall of the United Soviet Socialist Republic came a new set of variables that changed foreign policy. The profile of the "enemy" is not obscured. In many modern conflicts, violence often occurs between subtle ideological or ethnic enemies. The role of modern peacekeepers is evolving around these global human and economic conflicts. On the evening of September 11th, President George W. Bush's address to the nation articulated a shift in peacekeeping policy as it relates to national security and foreign relations, "America and our friends and allies join with all those who want peace and security in the world and we stand together to win the war against terrorism" (Bush Sept 11). In the evolving new foreign policy, definitions are broadened, national security is equated with international security, and American interests are linked with global interests.

The current evolution of the U.S. military's peacekeeping role stems from United Nations mandates that peacekeepers should maintain international peace and security. As published on the United Nations Website, the role of the peacekeeper is divided into three categories. (1) Cease-fire peacekeeping, in which conflicting countries can pull back, creating a more conducive environment for negotiations. (2) Multi-dimensional peacekeeping, in which experts inspire major political, social and economic change, strengthening national institutions. (3) Humanitarian peacekeeping, in which massive human suffering is relieved, delivering needed support and supplies (What is Peacekeeping?).

In the last six months, the role of U.S. peacekeepers has been drastically redefined to include these roles. In response to the threat of global terrorism, the U.S. has broadened homeland defense to include global interests. In a speech, marking the 100-day anniversary of September 11, Bush declared, "American power will be used against all terrorists of global reach" (Bush Dec. 20). The U.S. has now begun to build coalitions, attack terrorist networks, employ economic sanctions against those supporting and harboring terrorism, and condemn terrorist attacks wherever they occur. More funds have been made available the military's role, from not only eliminating terrorist targets, but also to providing 2.5 million humanitarian rations inside Afghanistan (Bush Dec. 20).

One positive example of U.S. military involvement in peacekeeping happened during the 1999 Kosovo campaign to stop the ethnic cleaning entire of the Albanian community (U.S. White House 41-42). The presence of NATO peacekeepers provided for surrender of Slobodan Milosevic, repatriation of Albanian refugees, and withdrawal of Serbian forces from contested soils (U.S. White House 41-52). The success of the peacekeepers' involvement in Kosovo in promoting democratic principles also increased the security and stability of Europe. In October 2000, the world watched as Kosovo held its first free and open municipal election, and its positive result increased public confidence that peacekeeping efforts could be successful.

Negative examples of U.S. military involvement in peacekeeping occurred during operations in Lebanon and Somalia, failing due to a lack of US focus and resolve. During the Lebanese civil turmoil in the eighties, several thousand American, French, British, and Italian peacekeepers intervened to stop bloodshed, yet terrorism and flagging public support forced the peacemakers to withdraw without finding a peaceful solution (Magnuson 54). During the Somali Conflict in 1992, 30,000 U.S. military troops attempted to open supply routes and disarm local militias, but horrific images of the bodies of U.S. soldiers being drug through the streets of Mogadishu helped to break U.S. national resolve (Carpender). Both missions were designed to decrease localized violence and civilian suffering, with limited international involvement, but in each, American uniforms because the target of heavily armed local militias. While these failed attempts at peacekeeping diminished U.S. international prestige, the most negative result was public disillusionment. Unsuccessful interventions in the civil matters of others countries, compounded by costs of American lives and resources, drastically limits the public resolve to intervene.

The tragedy of Rwanda is an example of the negative implications of restricting U.S. military involvement abroad. When the UN Security Council withdrew most of its peacekeepers from Rwanda, it created a deathly vacuum, resulting in the slaughter of 800,000 Tutsis in three months (Kuperman 105). Four months later the UN reversed its decision (Carnegie 4). In part, due to the Somalia experience, the U.S. continued to be reluctant to intervene (Nye 32). Experts project that the timely intervention of 6,000 U.S. troops could have prevented 275,000 Tutsi deaths (Kuperman 100). Lack of U.S. military action partially resulted in the human tragedy of Rwandan genocide, while the guilt of the nations grew and the national consciences appeared to numb.

Vietnam is an example of the positive implications of restricting U.S. military involvement abroad. For decades, France and Vietnam had been embroiled in military conflict. When France withdrew, the Americans entered in a peacekeeping role, fearing the domino effect. By 1955, American peacekeepers began advising military and political leaders against the communist forces lead by Ho Chi Minh (Bailey 916-917). Eventually, peacekeeping forces became military troops, escalating U.S. involvement, distracting the U.S. from its goal of peace, and entangling the U.S. in a long protracted war. Thus, public support decreased. What started out as a peacekeeping effort resulted in 47,355 American casualties, over one million Vietnamese casualties, and at a cost of 352 billion dollars (Bailey A34). The extent of such losses makes for a strong argument in limiting U.S. military engagement abroad.

Over the next decade, there is no doubt that the American military must play a leading part in insuring international peace and security. The old order, including the narrow traditional role of the military, is obsolete, and a new order, including a broadened innovative role of military, is required. Experiences in Kosovo, Lebanon and Somalia, Rwanda, and Vietnam testify that it is in our national interest to formulate and re-define broader peacekeeping roles for the United States military. As in the case of Kosovo, the U.S. needs to be bold enough to commit the forces needed to resolve the situation. As seen in Lebanon and Somalia, military objectives need to be well defined in order to avoid escalating entanglement and unnecessary loss of life. To prevent another Rwanda, the U.S. military policy needs to defend human rights violations wherever they occur, yet, move with enough caution and insight to prevent another Vietnam imbroglio. The lessons of September 11 call us to the openness and flexibility of preventative peacekeeping. The United States must realize that it has a vested interest in what goes on outside its borders, and that the best way to protect our national interests is to defend personal and economic rights worldwide.

ALCOA'S MASSENA OPERATIONS

● Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I would like to acknowledge the contribution to this nation provided by the workers and management of Alcoa's Massena, New York Operations. The Massena Operations make aluminum ingot—which is the raw material that is used in a variety of applications—and fabricated aluminum products.

I hope many of my colleagues will have the chance to visit the town of Massena, NY, because it is a wonderful community. Massena is located on the St. Lawrence River in St. Lawrence County, serving as a gateway to America's Fourth Coast, including the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Thousand Islands and the Great Lakes.

This year, Massena is celebrating its 200th birthday, and along with it a century of Alcoa involvement in the community. Alcoa is celebrating an incredible 100 years of aluminum production at its Massena location. As part of its celebration, Alcoa will establish the Massena Operations Memorial Park. Earlier this year, Alcoa-Massena officials also announced their contribution of $100,000 to the Massena Bicentennial.

The history of Alcoa's Massena Operations is a true American success story. A century ago, the Pittsburgh Reduction Company, a predecessor of Alcoa, built a smelting plant at Massena. The products manufactured at Massena have included wire and electric transmission cable. Consumer products with aluminum components made in Massena have harnessed the power of electricity for the home. The Massena Operations have also made significant contributions to our Nation's military and aerospace efforts.

For a century, Alcoa's Massena Operations has upheld the proud American tradition of quality manufacturing. I wish to thank you for the opportunity to highlight their fine work and the important role that Alcoa's Massena Operations plays in their community in New York.●

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred September 12, 2001, in Boston, MA. Three teenagers, claiming they wanted to "get back at Arabs," threw three Molotov cocktails onto a convenience store the day after the September 11 terrorist attacks. The teenagers thought that the store was owned by an Arab. The owner of the store, Aswin Patel, an Indian man, escaped unharmed. The three perpetrators face Federal hate crimes charges and have been charged with assault with intent to murder and arson.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.●

CONGRATULATING INDIANAPOLIS ON BECOMING DIGITAL TELEVISION ZONE

● Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate the city of Indianapolis on its recent designation as a "Digital Television Zone." Viewers in Indianapolis are fortunate to be served by local television broadcast stations that have been and continue to be leaders in the digital television transition. These stations are: WTHR, a dispatch broadcast-owned NBC affiliate; WISH-TV, a LIN television-owned CBS affiliate; WRTV, a dispatch broadcast-owned ABC affiliate; and WXIN, a tribune broadcast-owned FOX affiliate.

As the broadcast industry undertakes its transition to digital television, I am proud to say that our local Indianapolis affiliates are already fully on the air in digital.

For those not familiar with digital television, it is the next step in the evolution of television. Those of us old enough, remember the move from black and white to color. Now, the next exciting step in the process is digital. Just as the other communications mediums are moving from an analog to a digital world, so too is television.

This past spring, Indianapolis' local CBS station, WISH-TV, granted the wish of many of my constituents. Through digital television, the station was able to simultaneously broadcast four NCAA basketball tournament games. Our local ABC affiliate, WRTV, has expanded its primetime digital line up. Today, Indianapolis viewers can watch popular programs such as "Drew Carey," "Alias," and "NYPD Blue"—all in high definition. The local NBC affiliate, WTHR, airs "Crossing Jordan" and "The Tonight Show" in high-definition nightly. This year, they broadcast the Olympics' opening ceremonies in digital. It is compelling programming like this that will propel the transition forward and encourage consumers to invest in digital technology—like their local broadcasters have done already.

In January, Indianapolis earned the distinction of being named a "Digital TV Zone." As Mayor Bart Peterson said at the ribbon cutting ceremony, "Our designation as a Digital TV Zone—being one of only a handful of cities to have all local network affiliates broadcasting in digital—is evidence that Indianapolis is where it needs to be to compete in the digital world."

Through the Digital TV Zone Program, Indianapolis broadcasters pooled their resources over the past year to educate Indianapolis consumers—my constituents—about digital TV technology and its benefits.

The local stations cooperated with electronics manufacturers and retailers to post digital sets in high traffic areas throughout the city. If you walked through Indianapolis International Airport, or if you went to Conesco field house, or the NCAA Hall of Champions over the last 5 months, you would have seen the local Indianapolis stations in digital being displayed on high-definition digital television sets.

Clearly, Indianapolis broadcasters are doing their part to launch the digital television future. All of these different activities are designed to educate my constituents about the promise of this new technology.

There will, of course, be many challenges before all consumers can fully benefit from digital television. Despite any outstanding issues, I am proud to say that Indianapolis broadcasters are leading the charge into the digital television future and giving local viewers the opportunity to experience digital television now.●

LETTER TO HARVEY PITT, CHAIRMAN, SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I ask that a letter, sent today, to the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Harvey Pitt, from Senator BREAUX and myself be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 28, 2002.

Hon. HARVEY L. PITT,
Chairman, Securities and Exchange Commission, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN PITT: We are writing out of deep concern regarding recent reports about a variety of abuses in corporate accounting scandals by companies and corporate executives. In particular, the accounting practices at WorldCom that led to an error of more than $3.5 billion is unforgivable and inexcusable.

We are pleased to have taken steps to investigate several recent disturbing disclosures and encourage you to pursue initiatives to improve corporate responsibility and shareholder protections. We fear that these reports of corporate fraud may just be the tip of the iceberg, and the need to improve accountability in America's public companies is imminent.

American business is built upon an integrity and trust in business relationships that bolster our currency and provide a shining face of transparency that supports western values and spreads capitalism and corporate responsibility across the globe. We can't emphasize how important it is for you to continue to work to improve corporate disclosure, make corporate officers more accountable and develop a stronger, more independent audit system. American businesses must be trustworthy, transparent and able to withstand the light of any audit.

We look forward to working with you and the Securities and Exchange Commission as you fully investigate the companies and individuals who abuse the system and prosecute them to the full extent of the law. Your role is crucial as we work to restore confidence in American business and restore integrity and trust in our stock market.

Sincerely,

GORDON H. SMITH,
JOHN BREAUX,
U.S. Senate.●

COMMUNITY HERO

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise to salute a community leader in my home State of Oregon. Today, I want to recognize the efforts of Susan Abravanel, Education Coordinator at SOLV, a non-profit organization in Oregon, in advocating for service-learning, one of the most exciting educational initiatives taking hold in our Nation today.

Service-learning gives students the opportunity to learn through community service, but it is important to note that it is much more than just community service. It is a method of classroom instruction that engages a student's intellect through hands-on work outside the classroom that benefits the community at large. Research shows that students participating in service-learning make gains on achievement tests, complete their homework more often, and increase their grade point averages.

In addition to producing academic gains, service-learning is also associated with both increased attendance and reduced dropout rates. It is clear to educators across the country that service-learning helps students feel more connected to their own education while strengthening their connection to their community as well. It is for all of these reasons that Susan Abravanel is working so hard to advocate for service-learning in classrooms in Oregon and across the nation.

Ms. Abravanel is working closely with my office and with education leaders in Oregon to ensure that my home State remains a national leader in service-learning. Just 2 months ago, I introduced a bill with my colleague, Senator EDWARDS, to strengthen our Nation's commitment to service-learning. I feel confident that this bill will soon become law and that with Ms. Abravanel's continued efforts both here in Washington, DC, and at home in Oregon, students will continue to benefit from an education tied to civic engagement.

Ms. Abravanel exemplifies the type of engaged citizen our schools must endeavor to produce, and her persistence will ensure that future generations of Americans will give back to their communities just as she has. I would also like to note that Susan isn't just concerned about education, her interests and efforts in Portland's Jewish community are well known and highly appreciated, she is the new President of the Oregon chapter of the American Jewish Committee. I look forward to working with Susan in her new role at the AJC and thank her for her continuing devotion to service-learning.●

COMMUNITY HEROES

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President I rise today to recognize some community heroes in my home State of Oregon. The Agape House, which has been serving needy families in the Hermiston area for 15 years, is one of those rare organizations that dedicates its efforts entirely to the service of others.

Founded in 1987, Agape House began as a small group of volunteers providing food and clothing to approximately 100 families a month. Over the years, Agape House has been able to expand its reach, and last month was able to help 644 families in need. Food and clothing still constitute the majority of the assistance provided by Agape House's volunteers, but they are often able to help local residents with energy bills, prescription drug bills, emergency shelter, and any number of other unmet daily needs.

Perhaps the most encouraging aspect of Agape House's work is that it is done by a large number of area volunteers who take turns staffing the Agape House. On any given day, six to eight volunteers work at Agape House, but they are seldom the same six to eight people who were there the day before. Not only do its many volunteers come from the community, but Agape House relies primarily on food, clothing, and financial donations from local citizens. Agape House is truly a community effort, and, for that reason, has been uniquely successful in providing assistance to the needy families of western Umatilla County.

One recent and extraordinary example of Agape House's effectiveness involves a young single mother in the Hermiston area. As a young single mother with three mouths to feed, this jobless Hermiston woman relied on Agape House for many of her family's daily needs. When she was finally able to find work, she struggled to get to and from her job because she could not afford a car, and was at risk of finding herself jobless once again. Seeing her problems, Agape House stepped in and gave her a car. A car is not a typical charitable gift to a young woman in need. With her new car, this young woman flourished at her job, and Agape House, which once served this woman nearly every day, has not had a visit from her since the day she received her car. This is just one example of how Agape House goes the extra mile to help people truly become self-sufficient, which takes much more dedication than simply providing temporary relief.

I think it is important to recognize organizations like Agape House here on the Senate floor. The staff and volunteers associated with Agape House are heroes to their community, and are shining examples of what can be accomplished by a generous group of civic-minded citizens. I appreciate the important work they do each and every day, and want them to know that their efforts do not go unnoticed by those outside Umatilla County.●

STATEMENTS OF INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mrs. LINCOLN:

S. 2700. A bill to amend titles II and XVI of the Social Security Act to limit the amount of attorney assessments for representation of claimants and to extend the attorney fee payment system to claims under title XVI of that Act; to the Committee on Finance.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Social Security Attorney Fee Payment System Improvement Act of 2002. This bill will help ensure that all Social Security claimants have equal access to representation.

Unfortunately, the Social Security Administration's disability determination system has become far too complex for most claimants and their families to successfully navigate on their own. Claimants are confronted by a confusing, time-consuming and multi-level process, which, more often than not, results in a denial of their claim. Appealing a disability claim is a daunting task for anyone without the necessary legal experience, but for individuals who are in poor health or disabled, the procedural hurdles that must be cleared in order to obtain disability benefits can seem insurmountable. As a result, many of the hard working men and women applying for Social Security Disability Insurance, SSDI, benefits or Supplemental Security Insurance, SSI, benefits choose to retain an attorney to help them with their appeal. The bill I am introducing today will help both SSDI and SSI claimants get the benefits to which they are entitled by extending the attorney fee direct payment system to both programs, a change that is long overdue and that enjoys the support of both claimants' representatives and disability advocates.

Additionally, this bill corrects a serious and unintended consequence of the Ticket to Work Act of the 106th Congress. Although this plainly was a landmark piece of legislation, the disproportionately onerous nature of the attorney fee assessment provisions contained therein have caused a dramatic decline in the number of legal professionals who can afford to represent individuals seeking Social Security disability benefits. As a result of such a decrease in the number of attorneys skilled in this area of the law, the most vulnerable claimants, those with serious physical or mental impairments, those with financial challenges, and those who do not or cannot understand the disability claims process, are often left to find their own way through SSA's labyrinthine bureaucracy. This bill seeks to reverse this disturbing trend and to encourage attorneys to continue providing this extremely important service by enacting rational and equitable modifications to the fee assessment system.

I want to say that my long-term goal is to reform the Social Security disability claims process so that it is not so difficult and frustrating for claimants. However, I recognize that this will not happen overnight and, in the near term, it is essential that we enable citizens to cope with this onerous process.

I hope my colleagues will join me in ensuring that the hard working men and women of America obtain adequate legal representation as they pursue their Social Security disability claims. As my colleagues know, individuals with disabilities rely on Social Security disability and/or Supplemental Security Income benefits for life-sustaining income. We must do all we can to support their efforts to obtain benefits they need and deserve. This bill does just that.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself and Ms. SNOWE):

S. 2707. A bill to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide comprehensive pension protection for women; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it's a pleasure to join Senator SNOWE in introducing the Women's Pension Protection Act of 2002. In this new millennium, women still work in a world of "less" and "fewer." Less pay and fewer benefits, especially retirement benefits. Less job security and fewer opportunities for advancement. Less respect for their work and fewer rewards for their contributions.

A major challenge of our time is to protect women's retirement security. The legislation we introduce today meets this important goal by giving women greater say in the management of 401(k) funds, giving widows more generous survivor benefits, and granting divorced spouses expanded opportunities to receive a share of their former spouses' pension after a divorce.

The challenge of retirement security is overwhelmingly a women's issue. The Older Women's League's annual Mother's Day Report concludes that women's pension problems are rooted in the realities that shape their lives: the reality of the wage gap, the reality of caregiving responsibilities, and the reality of jobs that offer few benefits, especially pensions.

Almost 40 years after the Equal Pay Act was passed, women still earn only 73 percent of what men earn. You can't save what you don't earn. And the impact of the wage gap extends far beyond the years that women participate in the workforce. Over a lifetime, the wage gap adds up to an average of $250,000 less in earnings for a woman to invest in her retirement. The result is that one in four older women are living in poverty.

Women represent less than half of the paid workforce, but comprise almost two-thirds of those working in minimum wage jobs. This should not come as a surprise to anyone, but women are 96 percent of all childcare workers, 97 percent of receptionists, and 90 percent of secretaries. Because so many of these jobs are non-union, part-time, and low wage, women are much less likely to be covered by a pension plan than men.

At the same time, women are much more likely to spend time out of the workforce to tend to family caregiving responsibilities. In fact, the average woman now spends 12 years out of the workforce over her work life. That is time that she is not earning a pension, vesting in a pension or contributing to Social Security. This absence from the paid workforce translates into inadequate retirement income and an increased financial dependency on their spouses at retirement. A woman who drops out of the labor market for as few as five years, can end up with as much as 30 percent less in her defined contribution plan.

Although the pension laws are gender neutral, pension policy unintentionally discriminates against women. Women continue to be less likely to be covered by a pension plan and less likely to receive pension benefits. And even when women earn pensions, their benefits tend to be only a fraction of what men receive because of pension formulas that penalize them for moving in and out of the workforce. Only 13 percent of women age 65 and over receive a pension, and among that small group the median annual pension is only $3,000. These challenges are made even more acute by the fact that women live longer than men and have a greater need for retirement income than men.

We need to make our pension system fairer, especially for women. Married women often count on their husband's retirement benefits to support them in old age, then outlive their husbands and frequently their husbands' retirement income.

Over the last twenty years, reform of the Federal pension law has seen some improvement with changes that allow a widow to continue receiving defined benefit pension payments. The Retirement Equity Act of 1984 requires defined benefit pension plans to pay survivor benefits unless a spouse waives this protection. But this protection does not extend to 401(k) and other defined contribution plans.

The Women's Pension Protection Act offers simple, common sense improvements in our private pension system to ensure that retirement savings programs better respond to the realities of women's working lives. This bill will help women like Joan Mackey of Salem, New Jersey, who testified recently about the difficulties she has faced in trying to collect survivor benefits from her former husband's pension plan. Ms. Mackey's ex-husband wanted her to collect survivor benefits after his death, but because Ms. Mackey didn't know to ask for a widow's benefit at the time of their divorce, the plan now refuses to pay.

Sadly, Joan Mackey is not alone. Congress must do all it can to protect women's retirement security and address inequities in our pension laws that primarily affect women. I urge my colleagues to support the Women's Pension Protection Act.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to join with Senator KENNEDY in introducing The Women's Pension Protection Act of 2002 to improve the retirement security of women.

As Americans live longer, achieving financial security can be a particular challenge for women. Women live, on average, seven years longer than men but earn less money over their lifetime, and as women continue to be society's primary caregivers, they continue to lose time from the workplace during their prime earning years. The result? Just 40 percent of women have pensions, compared with 47 percent of men. Of those with pensions, women retirees receive only about half the pension benefits that men receive—on average, $4,200 annually compared to $7,800 for men.

With less time to invest in their retirement, women are frequently unable to establish a solid nest egg for future years. Women sometimes rely on their spouse's pension for essential savings in later years. If a marriage dissolves, as roughly half of marriages in America have, this can deal a terrible blow to a women's retirement plans.

For elderly women the situation worsens, as they are three times as likely than men to outlive their spouses. Lower pensions can make it difficult for women to make ends meet in their later years. Tragically, almost one in five nonmarried elderly women, 17 percent, live in poverty today. These facts help explain why our pension laws should reflect the reality and needs of our workforce.

The bill we are introducing today is aimed at meeting the unique financial needs of women. It recognizes the economic partnership of marriage, ensuring that women are included in financial decisions that effect their future. Under this bill, spousal consent would be required before participants can withdraw lump sum payments of pension benefits 401(k) plans. Similar requirements already exist for spouses of workers covered by traditional pension plans. This bill also encourages more investment into annuities, which pay a guaranteed stream of lifelong income and help to prevent poverty. Spouses will have the option of selecting a 75-percent survivor benefit, in addition to the current 50-percent survivor benefit.

This legislation also enhances the financial security of women by requiring plans to offer the option of increasing survivor benefits from 50 percent to at least 75 percent of her husband's retirement. It ensures that a widow can receive her husband's pension regardless of when the husband dies or whether he applied for the pension to begin. And it closes a glaring loophole by ensuring that pension plan administrators will abide by the division of pension benefits ordered by the courts in a divorce proceeding, regardless of when the order is given.

Ultimately, this legislation will strengthen our country's future by giving the tools women, and men, need to secure their retirement future. We have an opportunity to improve the benefits to our workforce and enhance opportunities for women in a way that makes sense. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this legislation.

Whereas in 1992, United States President George H.W. Bush, at the request of Lech Walesa, the first democratically elected President of Poland following World War II, ordered Paderewski's remains returned to his native Poland;

Whereas June 26, 1992, the remains of Paderewski were removed from the Mast of the Maine at Arlington National Cemetery, and were returned to Poland on June 29, 1992;

Whereas on July 5, 1992, Paderewski's remains were interred in a crypt at the St. John Cathedral in Warsaw, Poland; and

Whereas Paderewski wished his heart to be forever enshrined in America, where his lifelong struggle for democracy and freedom had its roots and was cultivated, and now his heart remains at the Shrine of the Czestochowa in Doylestown, Pennsylvania: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) recognizes the accomplishments of Ignacy Jan Paderewski as a musician, composer, statesman, and philanthropist; and

(2) acknowledges the invaluable efforts of Ignacy Jan Paderewski in forging close Polish-American ties, on the 10th Anniversary of the return of Paderewski's remains to Poland.

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, today I rise to submit a resolution recognizing the accomplishments of Ignacy Jan Paderewski as a musician, composer, statesman, and philanthropist and to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the return of his remains to Poland.

Born in Poland in 1860, Paderewski is remembered for his contributions to the arts and humanities and as one of the great men of our times. Paderewski was a brilliant and popular pianist who performed hundreds of concerts in Europe and the United States during the late 19th and early 20th centuries, donating the proceeds to numerous charitable causes. During WWI, Paderewski played a central role in achieving Poland's independence, becoming the first Premier of Poland in 1919 until 1922 when he left politics and returned to music.

The German invasion of Poland in 1939 spurred Paderewski to return to politics where he fought against the Nazi dictatorship in World War II. By joining the exiled Polish Government he helped to mobilize the Polish forces and to urge the United States to join the Allied Forces.

Paderewski died in 1941. At the direction of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Paderewski's remains were placed alongside America's honored dead in Arlington National Cemetery, where President Roosevelt said he may lie until Poland is free.

For over a half century, the remains of Paderewski were interred at Arlington National Cemetery. He did not live to see the U.S. and Allied Forces liberate Europe from the tyranny of Nazi control. Nor did he witness the subjugation of Poland during the Soviet era. It was, however, the legacy of Paderewski that inspired movements throughout Europe, including Solidarity in Poland, which led to the liberation of Europe.

In 1992, Solidarity Leader Lech Walesa, the first democratically elected President of Poland following WWII, asked U.S. President George H.W. Bush to return Paderewski's remains to his native homeland.

On July 5, 1992, Paderewski's remains were interred in a crypt at the St. John Cathedral in Warsaw, Poland.

So, as we near the 10th anniversary of this historic event, I submit this resolution and asked that it be properly referred.

SENATE RESOLUTION 297—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT PET OWNERS SHOULD REGULARLY VISIT THEIR VETERINARIANS FOR THEIR PETS TO RECEIVE CHECKUPS, AND FOR ADVICE ON ISSUES LIKE FLEA AND TICK CONTROL, ESPECIALLY DURING THE SPRING AND SUMMER MONTHS

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry:

S. RES. 297

Whereas approximately 60 percent of American households are pet-owning households;

Whereas there are approximately 68,000,000 dogs in American households;

Whereas there are approximately 73,000,000 cats in American households;

Whereas pet owners typically have strong relationships with their pets;

Whereas pet owners love their pets as members of their families and should consider veterinarians as partners in helping to keep family pets healthy and happy;

Whereas strong relationships between pets and veterinarians are important for the diagnosis of major and minor pet health issues;

Whereas the spring and summer months are prime seasons for infestation by ticks, mosquitoes, and fleas;

Whereas ticks, as carriers of diseases like Lyme Disease, mosquitoes, as carriers of parasites like heartworm, and fleas all pose potential threats to the health of pets;

Whereas many spring and summer threats to pet health are silent and potentially fatal, but can be prevented with regular visits to veterinarians;

Whereas veterinarians know the best methods and best products to provide for the healthy lives of pets; and

Whereas 100 percent of dogs not on a preventive treatment will contract heartworm when exposed to the parasite: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) pets should not face unnecessary health threats, which frequently arise during the spring and summer months;

(2) the spring and summer months are an important time to provide dogs and cats with control products to protect against illnesses caused or carried by ticks, mosquitoes, and fleas;

(3) pet owners should seek expert advice from their veterinarians to learn how to protect dogs and cats against potential spring and summertime diseases and illnesses caused by ticks, mosquitoes, and fleas; and

(4) pet owners should regularly visit their veterinarians for their pets to receive check-ups, for prevention of disease, and for advice on issues like flea and tick control.

SENATE RESOLUTION 298—HONORING THE LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY TIGERS MEN'S OUTDOOR TRACK AND FIELD TEAM

Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAU) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 298

Whereas Louisiana State University Men's Outdoor Track and Field Team won the 2002 NCAA Division I Championship;

Whereas head coach Pat Henry was awarded the MONDO NCAA Division I Coach of the Year, and led the team to victory over top seeded Tennessee;

Whereas 9 time all-American and 6 time national champion senior Walter Davis was awarded the MONDO Athlete of the Year and won the long jump event and the triple jump event in the 2002 NCAA Division I Championship hosted by Louisiana State University, as well as running the beginning leg of the 4x100 meter relay;

Whereas Tiger athletes Robert Parham, Pete Coley, and Bennie Brazell also competed in the 4x100 meter relay with a time of 38.32 seconds, the fourth fastest time in NCAA history;

Whereas Robert Parham also won his heat in the 200 meter dash with a time of 20.45 seconds and Bennie Brazell and Lueroy Colquhoun advanced to the finals in the 400 meter hurdles by winning their preliminaries with respective times of 49.57 and 49.99;

Whereas Javier Nieto finished eighth in the hammer throw to become the first Louisiana State University Tiger to be honored as an all-American in that event since 1993;

Whereas due to the efforts and abilities of the student athletes and head coach Pat Henry, the Louisiana State University Men's Outdoor Track and Field team won the 2002 NCAA Division I Championship; and

Whereas the team's victory exemplifies the hard work ethic and high goals set by Louisiana State University and the State of Louisiana: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate congratulates the Tigers of the Louisiana State University Men's Outdoor Track and Field team on winning the 2002 NCAA Division I Championship.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 127—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT THE PARTHENON MARBLES SHOULD BE RETURNED TO GREECE

Mr. FITZGERALD (for himself, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. SARBANES) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 127

Whereas the Parthenon was built on the hill of the Acropolis in Athens, Greece in the mid-fifth century B.C. under the direction of the Athenian statesman Pericles and the design of the sculptor Phidias.

Whereas the Parthenon is the ultimate expression of the artistic genius of Greece, the preeminent symbol of the Greek cultural heritage—its art, architecture, and democracy—and of the contributions that modern Greeks and their forefathers have made to civilization;

Whereas the Parthenon has served as a place of worship for ancient Greeks, Orthodox Christians, Roman Catholics, and Muslims;

Whereas the Parthenon has been adopted by imitation by the United States in many preeminent public buildings, including the Lincoln Memorial;

Whereas over 100 pieces of the Parthenon's sculptures—now known as the Parthenon Marbles—were removed from the Parthenon under questionable circumstances between 1801 and 1816 by Thomas Bruce, seventh Earl of Elgin, while Greece was still under Ottoman rule;

Whereas the removal of the Parthenon Marbles, including their perilous voyage to Great Britain and their careless storage there for many years, greatly endangered the Marbles;

Whereas the Parthenon Marbles were removed to grace the private home of Lord Elgin, who transferred the Marbles to the British Museum only after severe personal economic misfortunes;

Whereas the sculptures of the Parthenon were designed as an integral part of the structure of the Parthenon temple; the carvings of the friezes, pediments, and metopes are not merely statuary, movable decorative art, but are integral parts of the Parthenon, which can best be appreciated if all the Parthenon marbles are reunified;

Whereas the Parthenon is a universal symbol of culture, democracy, and freedom, making the Parthenon Marbles of concern not only to Greece but to all the world;

Whereas, since obtaining independence in 1830, Greece has sought the return of the Parthenon Marbles;

Whereas the return of the Parthenon Marbles would be a profound demonstration by the United Kingdom of its appreciation and respect for the Parthenon and classical art;

Whereas returning the Parthenon Marbles to Greece would be a gesture of good will on the part of the British Parliament, and would set no legal precedent, nor in any other way affect the ownership or disposition of other objects in museums in the United States or around the world;

Whereas the United Kingdom should return the Parthenon Marbles in recognition that the Parthenon is part of the cultural heritage of the entire world and, as such, should be made whole;

Whereas Greece would provide care for the Parthenon Marbles equal or superior to the care provided by the British Museum, especially considering the irreparable harm caused by attempts by the museum to remove the original color and patina of the Marbles with abrasive cleaners;

Whereas Greece is constructing a new, permanent museum in full view of the Acropolis to house all the Marbles, protected from the elements in a safe, climate-controlled environment;

Whereas Greece has pledged to work with the British government to negotiate mutually agreeable conditions for the return of the Parthenon Marbles;

Whereas the people of Greece have a greater, ancient bond to the Parthenon Marbles, which were in Greece for over 2,200 years of the over 2,430 year history of the Parthenon;

Whereas the British people support the return of the Parthenon Marbles, as reflected in several recent polls;

Whereas a resolution signed by a majority of members of the European Parliament urged the British government to return the Parthenon Marbles to their natural setting in Greece;

Whereas the British House of Commons Select Committee on Culture, Media and Sport is to be commended for examining the issue of the disposition of the Parthenon Marbles in hearings held in 2000; and

Whereas in 2004 the Olympic Games will take place in Athens, Greece—birthplace of the Olympics—and the Parthenon Marbles should be returned to their home in Athens by that time: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the Government of the United Kingdom should enter into negotiations with the Government of Greece as soon as possible to facilitate the return of the Parthenon Marbles to Greece before the Olympics in 2004.

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, global commerce is a force for progress. However, current trade rules are too often used to undermine environmental protections and democratic rights in the name of "free trade." Fast track is the expansion of presidential authority in international trade. However, the Thomas substitute would aid powerful corporations searching the globe for cheap labor, lowering standards for workers' rights, public health and education, consumer rights and environmental laws worldwide, and causing developing countries to become even more impoverished. Fast track legislation consistently overlooks the rights of workers in developing countries.

The Ways and Means Chairman, Representative BILL THOMAS, has created a substitute for the fast track authority which provides that a nation only need enforce its own labor laws, whatever they might be, no matter how inadequate. Furthermore, H. Res. 450 would eliminate Senate amendments that restrict child labor in trade agreements, require countries to cooperate in the war against terrorism, and require a respect for non-discrimination in employment. In addition, the Thomas substitute fails to provide any enforceable environmental protections. The Thomas substitute, also, fails to provide an adequate oversight role for Congress.

Chairman BILL THOMAS is adding never-before-considered legislative proposals to a rule on a procedural motion. He is denying this body an opportunity to debate, amend or offer a substitute to his proposal. He is denying us our right to free speech. The step of going to conference with the Senate is pro forma and non-controversial. However, Chairman THOMAS is proposing a convoluted rule that, if adopted, will add up to a dozen extraneous and new items to the conference process. The Democratic Rules Committee staff is not aware of any other instance in this or any recent Congress in which a self-executing rule has been used to insert never-considered legislation into conference.

Trade authority goes far beyond tariff reduction and involves tradeoffs on intellectual property rights, environmental standards, basic labor laws and other issues of such importance to the American worker. The Thomas substitute includes a new Republican Trade Adjustment Assistance bill. This is an amended version of the House fast track bill, which passed in December by a one-vote margin.

Each of these proposals has serious flaws. The Thomas substitute undermines the Senate TAA health care provisions by reducing the level of support for workers from 70 percent to 60 percent. The Senate bill increases the TAA funding threefold, from $100 million to $300 million. This reflects the fact that the TAA annually runs out of money. But the Thomas substitute would only raise TAA funding only slightly, from $100 million to $110 million. Under the Thomas substitute, TAA and steelworker health care benefits would be severely limited in availability and cost too much for most workers to afford.

The Thomas substitute guts the Senate TAA non-health care provisions, by narrowing the benefits coverage of secondary workers even further than existing law, by eliminating the pilot wage insurance program for older workers with low-to-medium incomes. In addition, the Thomas substitute cuts almost two-thirds of the increased funding that is in the Senate bill.

During a time when the public has clearly voiced its concern that global trade matters move more into the eye of public scrutiny, this Thomas substitute would make the fast track trade bill the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) on steroids. Since NAFTA's passage in 1995, the trade deficit between the United States and Mexico has ballooned to $29 billion annually. An estimated 700,000 American jobs have been lost to nations that don't have to play by the same labor and environmental rules that American workers do.

If we approve the Thomas substitute, our Representatives and Senators will limit themselves to having no more than 20 hours to debate any trade deal brought before them for ratification and to vote on the issue within 60 days of when it is introduced. Those limits would curtail public discussions about trade policy. Extended debates on Capitol Hill give ordinary citizens the chance to influence public policy by expressing their opinions to their elected representatives. If trade legislation is sped through Congress, that would limit the opportunities for careful deliberation on the merits and weaknesses of complex trade agreements. Curtailing discussion and debate of legislation is fundamentally undemocratic.

The sole purpose of this extraordinary and unprecedented legislative sleight of hand is, as Rules Committee Chairman DAVID DREIER says, to "strengthen the hand of House conferees before we get to conference." This is a political move. Furthermore, it would do so by short-circuiting the democratic processes of this body. This would deprive all members of the opportunity to consider important legislative proposals in a manner consistent with the parliamentary traditions of this House.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to strongly oppose H. Res. 450.

RELATING TO CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R.
3009, ANDEAN TRADE PROMOTION AND DRUG ERADICATION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H. Res. 450, the so called Thomas Rule on the motion to go to conference on Trade Promotion Authority (TPA) legislation. But I also want to make clear that I support Trade Promotion Authority for the President and I hope I have the opportunity to vote in favor of a conference report on TPA later this year.

Globalization is here to stay. With markets now linked globally by computers, satellite communications, and advanced transportation networks, international trade and investment will play an increasing role in American prosperity. We cannot, as a nation, afford to retreat from a proactive strategy of trade expansion that takes advantage of our position as the world's most prosperous and dynamic economy.

Trade liberalization is also an important tool toward developing responsible global relations. It is a tool, as the preamble of the GATT states for "raising standards of living, ensuring full employment, developing the full use of the resources of the world and expanding the production and exchange of goods." Indeed, open markets are an important engine of economic growth, which can expand opportunities, raise living standards, and affect social change. More importantly, however, trade liberalization provides our nation with an additional diplomatic tool with which to deal with international disputes and/or coalition building; trade's national security component cannot be understated.

Unfortunately, however, today's vote is not about trade. It isn't even a pro forma exercise to go to conference and reconcile the differences between the House and Senate. It is a cynical and unprecedented procedural move to expand the scope of the underlying trade bill and to strengthen House negotiators' position in conference.

I understand and accept that the bill approved in the other chamber (H.R. 3009) contained provisions on which this House has spoken and that this Rule attempts to solidify the House's voice on matters such as the Andean Trade Bill, Customs Security, Dispute Resolution, and of course TPA. This Rule also, however, includes provisions on which this House has not yet had a clear debate and vote. I have deep concerns about the House of Representatives making an end-run on its rules and the guiding principles of a democratic body in this matter. It is for this reason that I oppose this Rule.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, on December 6, 2001, I voted for TPA. I have supported every piece of trade legislation brought before the House since being elected to Congress. My record on trade is clear—I support free trade. This Rule today, however, is not about trade and I cannot support moves that undermine our body's rules and ideals in the name of expediency and process. Again, I hope to vote later this year on legislation granting the President Trade Promotion Authority and hope House and Senate negotiators can expeditiously develop a conference report for which I can soon vote.

HONORING REVEREND JOHN J.
HURLEY

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Reverend John J. Hurley, OSFS for his most recent achievements as the Moderator of the Model United Nations Program at both Father Judge and Northeast Catholic High Schools located in my Congressional District. Since January of this year, Fr. Hurley has been awarded three distinct honors for his work in advancing the understanding of international relations on the high school level. He is truly a beacon of diplomacy and deserves great acclaim for his dedication to the younger generation of Americans.

For the second time in the last three years, The International Relations Association of Georgetown University has named Fr. John J. Hurley, OSFS as the National Coach-Moderator of the Year. This award was presented to Fr. Hurley, OSFS on February 17, 2002 at the closing ceremonies of the 39th Annual North American Invitational Model United Nations Conference (NAIMUN XXXIX). Over 3,000 high school students from three hundred high schools in the United States of America, Canada, Brazil, Germany, Japan, The Netherlands, and Oman participated in NAIMUN XXXIX.

Additionally, on March 15, 2002, the Middle States Council for Social Studies awarded its 2001–2002 Distinguished Service Award to Fr. Hurley, OSFS. In making the presentation, Frances Warren, award chairperson, noted Father Hurley's significant service and support for the advancement of social studies in the Middle States area.

On May 4, 2002, the United Nations Association of the United States of America (UNA–USA) presented its highest award for the best delegation at its annual International Academic Competition to a Joint Team of Students from Northeast Catholic and Father Judge High Schools. Seven hundred students from around the globe participated in this international convention at UN Headquarters in New York City, which was co-hosted by the United Nations and Columbia University. Fr. Hurley served as the coach of this team.

Mr. Speaker, what will be next for Fr. Hurley in the remaining six months of this year? This noted scholar and advisor has worked tirelessly since 1954 in the pursuit of advancing the awareness and understanding of international relations. Let it be known that Fr. Hurley's work in international relations is in addition to his leadership position as the National Director of the Foreign Mission of the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales. Mr. Speaker, I agree with The Reverend Joseph G. Morrissey's, OSFS, the Provincial of the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales, statement; "Fr. Hurley is a positive role model and leader to so many young men and women in the various schools. He invites, draws, and attracts them to a knowledge of world affairs in a Salesian tradition that will remain with them for the rest of their days."

TIME FOR A CAREER CHANGE

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I have been blessed with the honor and privilege of representing the people of Western New York for thirty-two years: two in the New York State Senate, two in the New York State Assembly, and twenty-eight in the U.S. House of Representatives. For eight of my years in the House, I served as Chairman of the important Small Business Committee. For the last five years, I have served as Ranking Democrat on another major committee of even broader reach and import, the House Financial Services Committee.

I am extremely grateful for the honor the citizens of Western New York have given to me and most especially for the trust they have imparted to me over the course of those thirty-two years. During all that time, I have tried my best to serve the people of Western New York honestly, diligently, faithfully and intelligently and have worked hard to honor, earn, and deserve their trust.

In that span of three decades, I have met and worked with some of the most talented and noble men and women in this country. I shall treasure each and every one of those relationships.

But there comes a time to seek new horizons. And, for me, this is the right time. So I announce today that I will not be seeking another term in Congress.

I pondered very seriously whether to seek new horizons in 1992, at the time of the last redistricting, when my two closest friends in Congress, Henry Nowak and Matt McHugh, decided to leave. For many years now, I have been thinking about what I should do subsequent to the 2002 redistricting. I very much want to see the Democrats regain a majority in the House. Had the court-imposed plan not been withdrawn today, I might well have decided to run and be part of that effort.

But I have every confidence that a Democrat will win in the new 28th Congressional district and there are many talented Democrats who could represent it well: Congresswoman LOUISE SLAUGHTER, Mayor Bill Johnson of Rochester, Mayor Anthony Masiello of Buffalo, State Senator Byron Brown, State Senator Richard Dollinger, many Assemblymen and women, including Robin Schimming, Sam Hoyt, Arthur Eve, Francine

DelMonte, David Gantt. There are others who are also equally well qualified, including former Erie County Legislative Chairmen Len Lenihan and Chuck Swanick, Niagara Falls Councilman Paul Dyster, Niagara County District Attorney Matt Murphy, County Legislator Lynn Marinelli, etc.—the list goes on and on.

Engaging in a contest against other talented and honorable Democrats such as these is not something I choose to do. Instead, I choose to pursue new horizons.

Until this very day, I have been making contingency plans to run, not knowing what the Court would ultimately decide. And the information I have been receiving, including polling data, has made it clear that I would win both a primary and a general election. The primary election because of the historic Democratic primary voter turnout in Erie, Niagara and Orleans Counties, which has always been far higher than the turnout in Monroe County (approximately 3 to 1); and the general because the new 28th has a significant Democratic voter registration advantage—the first time I would have had such an advantage.

But winning has never been the issue. The issue has been whether I wanted to seek new horizons within the new 28th District by getting to know and seeking to serve the 410,000 of the 654,000 residents who would be new constituents for me, or whether I wanted to seek new horizons elsewhere.

And so this time, this year, I have decided to pursue those new horizons elsewhere rather than seek re-election. I have no plans to retire. I am doing what so many in this country now do at my point in life—changing careers. Whether this career change will take me back to the law, or a career in social justice, academia, corporate governance or other public service, I simply do not know. But I am excited and enthusiastic at the prospect of exploring this vast range of new opportunities.

I am pleased to have been able to assist the citizens of Western New York and to help our local communities over the past three decades. While I have decided not to seek another term, I plan to continue working hard on behalf of my district and country for the balance of this year and beyond.

I have often been asked why I chose to be in public service. The answer is simple: there is no greater satisfaction than to serve one's community. I have consistently believed and said that public service gives one a unique opportunity not only to serve one's fellow citizens, but to be engaged in, and apply one's mind and heart to, the great issues of our day, to be fully involved in the action and passion of our time. My experience has underscored that perspective. I am grateful to the citizens of Western New York for giving me that privilege, and most especially, for the trust they have placed in me.

HONORING DR. PAUL PRIESZ OF CALIFORNIA

HON. HOWARD P. "BUCK" McKEON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. McKEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Paul Priesz, Principal of Valencia High School which is located in the Santa Clarita Valley. Recently, the Association of California School Administrators named him the top secondary principal in the state of California.

As June comes to an end and the school year closes, it is a fitting time to reflect upon the capable leadership of Dr. Priesz. He was assigned the formidable responsibility of planning and opening a new high school and has been the guiding influence at Valencia High School since it opened in 1993. Today, the school is one of the premier high schools in Los Angeles County.

High school administration requires many qualities—including vision, dedication, patience, strength, energy, creativity, the competence to balance an impossibly busy schedule, a willingness to allow people to experiment, the expertise to support a wide variety of school programs and reforms, and the ability to understand the complexity of teens for whom each day presents a new crisis. Possessing all of the traits, Dr. Priesz is an exemplary high school principal.

A dynamic educator who is committed to educational quality and academic excellence, Dr. Priesz has developed programs to meet the scholastic and social needs of all students. He gives abundant support to the handicapped and underrepresented population and avidly endorses extra-curricular programs to foster student growth and achievement. "What is best for kids" is the guiding doctrine for all decisions made at Valencia High School.

Dr. Priesz is a dedicated leader who believes in his staff and students. He manages school programs by focusing attention on the importance of building collaborative relationships yet at the same time allowing everyone the creative freedom needed to accomplish their job. Dr. Priesz asks nothing of his staff that he is not willing to do himself, and he continually displays a sincere, caring demeanor. He is highly supportive of professional development and school reform initiatives in order to perpetuate a vigorous learning environment.

Mr. Speaker, Valencia High School is fortunate to have such an extraordinary principal. I want to thank Dr. Paul Priesz for his leadership, inspiration and high standards. He has made a positive impact on thousands of students. In turn, Dr. Priesz is making our great nation a better place to live.

H. RES. 467: INDEPENDENCE FOR KOSOVA

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, since the cessation of NATO's 1999 conflict with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in Kosova remains under a United Nations mandate. But progress in Kosova is being held up by its lack of independence and its inability to determine its own fate. For that reason, I am introducing, together with the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), a resolution expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the United States should declare its support for the independence of Kosova.

The Kosovars, the United Nations, NATO and the international community are now making efforts to rebuild Kosova, revitalize its economy, establish democratic institutions of self-government, and heal the scars of war.

Under President Slobodan Milosevic, the Yugoslav government dismantled Kosova's political structures, replaced ethnic Albanians with Serbs in most jobs, enabled Serb-owned firms to take over Albanian-owned companies, and forbade Albanians from purchasing or improving property.

As a result of this systematic persecution and discrimination, today the unemployment rate in Kosova is currently between 60 and 70 percent, increasing the likelihood of Kosovars either entering criminal networks or working abroad in order to survive. The perpetuation of these economic difficulties heightens the potential for continued instability in the region.

The only way to address the problem of the chronic instability that plagues the region, and the way towards a genuine, long-term political and economic stability of Kosova and the region, lies not only in the physical and social reconstruction of Kosova, but in considering Kosovar independence as a solution. Unless massive job creation is facilitated by guaranteeing the security of foreign investments through an independent Kosova, the impact of these economic difficulties could prove detrimental to U.S. interests in the region.

Three years after the war's end, Kosova is already responsible for 93 percent of its budget, with 7 percent supplied by foreign donors, underscoring its commitment to growing a market economy, not an aid economy. Under the Yugoslav constitution of 1974, Kosova was equivalent in most ways to Slovenia, Croatia, and the other republics. In its position as an "autonomous province," Kosova, in practice, exercised the same powers as a republic. It has its own parliament, high courts, central bank, police service, and defense force. Through its definition in 1968 as a part of the Yugoslav Federal System, it gained representation at the federal level.

When Slovenia and Croatia demanded independence, similar arguments were made by Western governments against recognizing those countries. However, eventually the same Western governments did recognize not only the independence of Slovenia and Croatia, but Bosnia-Herzegovina and Macedonia as well, having discovered that independence for those nations involved not so much a change of borders as a change in the status of existing borders. The lines on the map remained the same, but their status was upgraded from republican to national. It is fitting that the Kosovars are allowed to follow the same path towards independence.

Accordingly, it is time for the United States to abide by its recognition that a right to self-determination exists as a fundamental right of all people through declaring its support for the independence of Kosova.

Mr. Speaker, for the information of my colleagues, I insert a copy of H. Res. 467 at this point in the RECORD.

H. RES. 467

Whereas the United States and the international community recognize that a right to self-determination exists as a fundamental right of all people;

Whereas Kosova was constitutionally defined as a sovereign territory in the First National Liberation Conference for Kosova on January 2, 1944, and this status was confirmed in the Constitution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia adopted in 1946, and the amended Yugoslav constitution adopted in 1974 preserved the autonomous status of Kosova as a de facto republic,

Whereas prior to the disintegration of the former Yugoslavia, Kosova was a separate political and legal entity with separate and distinct financial institutions, police force, municipal and national government, school system, judicial and legal system, hospitals and other independent organizations;

Whereas Serbian dictator Slobodan Milosevic rose to power in 1987 on a platform of ultranationalism and anti-Albanian racism, advocating violence and hatred against all non-Slavs and specifically targeting the Albanians of Kosova,

Whereas Slobodan Milosevic subsequently stripped Kosova of its self-rule, without the consent of the people of Kosova;

Whereas the elected Assembly of Kosova, faced with these intolerable acts, adopted a Declaration of Independence on July 2, 1990, proclaimed the Republic of Kosova, and adopted a constitution on September 7, 1990, based on the international legal principles of self-determination, equality, and sovereignty;

Whereas in recognition of the de facto dissolution of the Yugoslav federation, the European community established principles for the recognition of the independence and sovereignty of the republics of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Kosova fully satisfied those principles as a de facto republic within the federation;

Whereas a popular referendum was held in Kosova from September 26-30, 1991, in which 87 percent of all eligible voters cast ballots and 99.87 percent voted in favor of declaring Kosova independent of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Whereas, from the occupation of Kosova in 1989 until the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) military action against the Milosevic regime in 1999, the Albanians of Kosova were subjected to the most brutal treatment in the heart of Europe since the Nazi era, forcing approximately 400,000 Albanians to flee to Western Europe and the United States;

Whereas in the spring of 1999 almost 1,000,000 Kosovar Albanians were driven out of Kosova and at least 10,000 were murdered by the Serbian paramilitary and military;

Whereas Slobodan Milosevic was indicted by the International War Crimes Tribunal and extradited to The Hague in June 2001 to stand trial for war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide in Kosova, Bosnia, and Croatia;

Whereas the United Nations established Kosova as a protectorate under Resolution 1244, ending the decade long Serbian occupation of Kosova and Milosevic's genocidal war in Kosova;

Whereas Kosovar Albanians, together with representatives of the Serb, Turkish, Roma, Bosniak, and Ashkali minorities in Kosova, have held free and fair municipal and general elections in 2000 and 2001 and successfully, established a parliament in 2002, which in turn elected a president and prime minister;

Whereas 50 percent of the population in Kosova is under the age of 25 and the unemployment rate is currently between 60 and 70 percent, increasing the likelihood of young people entering criminal networks, the source of which lies outside of Kosova, or working abroad in order to survive unless massive job creation is facilitated by guaranteeing the security of foreign investments through an orderly transition to the independence of Kosova;

Whereas the Kosova parliament is committed to developing a western-style democracy in which all citizens, regardless of ethnicity, are granted full human and civil rights and are committed to the return of all noncriminal Serbs who fled Kosova during and after the war; and

Whereas there is every reason to believe that independence from Serbia is the only viable option for Kosova, after autonomy has failed time and time again: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the United States should—

(1) publicly support the independence of Kosova and the establishment of Kosova as a sovereign and democratic state in which human rights are respected, including the rights of ethnic and religious minorities, as the only way to lasting peace and stability in the Balkans;

(2) recognize the danger that delay in the resolution of Kosova's final status poses for the political and economic viability of Kosova and the future of Southeast Europe;

(3) work in conjunction with the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and other multilateral organizations to facilitate an orderly transition to the independence of Kosova; and

(4) provide its share of assistance, trade, and other programs to support the government of an independent Kosova and to encourage the further development of democracy and a free market economic system.

HONORING THE WORK OF GLORIA BURKE

HON. WILLIAM D. DELAHUNT

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a woman who has dedicated her life to the safety and well being of the children and families in Weymouth, Massachusetts. She is an individual with a noble sense of compassion and integrity, who is being honored today on the occasion of her retirement from Weymouth Youth & Family Services after 30 years of devoted service.

After receiving her Bachelor's Degree at the University of Massachusetts Boston, Gloria earned a Master's degree in Counseling Psychology from Cambridge College. As a Licensed Clinical Social Worker and Family Therapist, Gloria came to the aid of countless struggling families to overcome the challenges associated with poverty, substance abuse, child abuse, domestic violence, and other social ills.

In 1971, Gloria was hired as the Community Education Director and Therapist for Weymouth Youth and Family Services. After ten dedicated years, Gloria's talents were recognized and she was asked to serve as the organization's Director, the position in which she has excelled in for two decades. Under Gloria's direction, Weymouth Youth and Family Services has provided food to the hungry, shelter to the homeless, financial assistance to the poor, and counseling to those in crisis. For several years, I have been a proud participant in the Weymouth Youth & Family Services' Annual Christmas Celebration, which Gloria founded and has raised thousands of dollars each year to benefit families in need during the holiday season.

During her tenure with the Weymouth Youth & Families Services office, Gloria has faced head-on the difficult challenges facing the youth in the community—from suicide to drug use, from racism and to violence. Her work as part of the Teen Facility Development Committee, which converted the shuttered police station into a thriving teen center, stands as a testament to Gloria's commitment to providing a promising future for the youth in the Town.

Gloria Burke is Weymouth's own in the truest sense. Born in the Town, she was educated in its public school system, and continues to live there today with her husband Jack, with whom she raised four children.

I am honored today to call Gloria Burke one of my closest friends. She has been a role model for me and the many thousands of those in Weymouth who have been touched by her genuine giving and caring nature. I know that her legacy will continue to be a lasting inspiration to future generations who wish to serve the community.

INTRODUCTION OF BELARUS DEMOCRACY ACT

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today the Belarus Democracy Act of 2002, which is intended to help promote democratic development, human rights and the rule of law in the Republic of Belarus, as well as encourage the consolidation and strengthening of Belarus' sovereignty and independence. When measured against other European countries, the state of human rights in Belarus is abysmal—it has the worst record of any European state.

Through an illegitimate 1996 referendum, Alexander Lukashenka usurped power, while suppressing the duly-elected legislature and the judiciary. His regime has blatantly and repeatedly violated basic freedoms of speech, expression, assembly, association and religion. The fledgling democratic opposition, non-governmental organizations and independent media have all faced harassment. There are credible allegations of Lukashenka regime involvement in the disappearances—in 1999 and 2000—of opposition members and a journalist. There is growing evidence that Belarus is a leading supplier of lethal military equipment to rogue states. A draft bill is making its way in the Belarusian legislature that would restrict non-traditional religious groups. Several days ago, on June 24, two leading journalists were sentenced to two and 2½ years, respectively, of "restricted freedom" for allegedly slandering the Belarusian President.

Despite efforts by Members of Congress, the Helsinki Commission which I co-chair, the State Department, various American NGOs, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and other European organizations, the regime of Alexander Lukashenka continues its hold onto power with impunity and to the detriment of the Belarusian people.

One of the primary purposes of this bill is to demonstrate U.S. support for those struggling to promote democracy and respect for human rights in Belarus despite the formidable pressures they face from the anti-democratic regime. The bill authorizes increases in assistance for democracy-building activities such as support for non-governmental organizations, independent media—including radio and television broadcasting to Belarus, and international exchanges. The bill also encourages free and fair parliamentary elections, conducted in a manner consistent with international standards—in sharp contrast to recent parliamentary and presidential elections in Belarus which most assuredly did not meet democratic standards. As a result of these elections, Belarus has the distinction of lacking legitimate presidential and parliamentary leadership, which contributes to that country's self-imposed isolation.

In addition, this bill would impose sanctions against the Lukashenka regime, and deny high-ranking officials of the regime entry into the United States. Strategic exports to the Belarusian Government would be prohibited, as well as U.S. Government financing, except for humanitarian goods and agricultural or medical products. The U.S. Executive Directors of the international financial institutions would be encouraged to vote against financial assistance to the Government of Belarus except for loans and assistance that serve humanitarian needs.

The bill would require reports from the President concerning the sale or delivery of weapons or weapons-related technologies from Belarus to rogue states.

Mr. Speaker, finally, it is my hope that this bill will help put an end to the pattern of clear, gross and uncorrected violations of OSCE commitments by the Lukashenka regime and will serve as a catalyst to facilitate Belarus' integration into democratic Europe in which democratic principles and human rights are respected and the rule of law prevails.

LTC RICHARD WANDKE, ARMY RANGER HALL OF FAME INDUCTION

HON. EDWARD R. ROYCE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and to pay tribute to U.S. Army Ranger LTC Richard "Tex" Wandke (Ret.) of Cypress, CA, on his induction into the Ranger Hall of Fame for exceptional valor and honor throughout his distinguished 25-year military career.

In 1963, LTC Wandke graduated as the Distinguished Military Student from the University of Maine, then went on to complete Ranger school and was assigned as a platoon leader for the Fourth Infantry Division. He then volunteered to serve his country in Vietnam, and was assigned as an advisor to the 43rd Vietnamese Ranger Battalion.

During his service, LTC Wandke earned various honors for his actions in combat, including two Silver Stars, the Legion of Merit, Three Bronze Stars and Three Purple Hearts. He also earned the Distinguished Service Cross through his valorous conduct in commanding his company on a search and destroy mission in Vietnam on May 27, 1969. When one of the rifle squads under his command surprised seven enemy soldiers and opened fire, hostile reinforcements soon arrived in huge numbers and unleashed tremendous firepower on his company's perimeter. LTC Wandke rallied his men to break the enemy assault, and then directed all of the able men under his command to establish a landing zone to evacuate the wounded. Although wounded himself, LTC Wandke stayed behind to protect the dead and critically wounded, and prevented the enemy from overrunning his position.

Since retiring from active service in 1988, LTC Wandke has been teaching high school ROTC. He is also active in several veterans organizations and was the National commander of the Legion of Valor from 1994-1995. Through his service both on the battlefield and off, he has exemplified the Ranger Creed: Rangers Lead the Way!

Mr. Speaker, I can think of no individual more deserving of inclusion in the Ranger Hall of Fame than LTC Richard "Tex" Wandke. I believe that every American owes LTC Wandke a debt of gratitude, and that he is a singularly excellent role model for all Rangers. I congratulate him on his impressive accomplishment and encourage him to continue his service to the community.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO STACEY ANNE YOUNG

HON. MIKE ROGERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to wish Stacey Anne Young congratulations upon her acceptance into the University of Detroit Mercy School of Law. She is a hard working individual who has worked with me for the past three years. Her presence will be greatly missed by all.

As a 1999 graduate of James Madison College at Michigan State University, Stacey began working for me shortly thereafter in the Michigan Senate as my Executive Assistant. She was the Committee Clerk for the Senate Human Resources, Labor, Senior Citizens, and Veterans Affairs Committee along with being the scheduler of my day-to-day activities. At all times, Stacey presented herself with professionalism to all of those with whom she came in contact.

Most recently, Stacey played an integral role in my office in the United States House of Representatives. As my office manager, she was responsible for setting up the office, for managing a million dollar office budget, and for supervising several key members of my staff. She also was an asset as my scheduler and coordinated all of my events and appointments in Washington, DC and in Michigan.

I am extremely impressed with Stacey's positive attitude and dedication. Her sensitivity, diligence, energy, and sense of humor made working with her a joy.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Stacey Anne Young for her acceptance to law school where I know she will achieve the highest commendation. I wish her much success in all of her future endeavors.

IN HONOR OF KEN PETERSON

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of a friend and fellow public servant from my Congressional district, Kern County Supervisor Ken Peterson.

Ken was committed to his family, his faith, and his community. Becky, his wife, their eight children and three grandchildren, were Ken's inspiration, support structure and compass. They knew well Ken's motto, "working quietly and effectively." It exemplified the life he led.

The Petersons moved to Bakersfield in the 1970s from Orange County, California. Before dedicating his career to serving his community in public office, he owned and operated a local family business, contributing to the growth and development of the area. In the process, gaining a better understanding of the needs of the people he would later serve.

In 1992, Ken was elected to the Kern County Board of Supervisors and was re-elected to subsequent terms in 1996 and 2000. Previously, Ken served as a member of the Bakersfield City Council, including 2 years as Vice-Mayor. He served as Chairman of the Board of Supervisors in 1995 and 2000 and ably represented Kern County before the United States Senate and House Subcommittees, testifying on the issue of Endangered Species Act Reform.

Ken and I worked together on a number of issues over the years: hospital funding, oil and energy production, land use, private property rights, along with other local concerns of the people who live and work in Bakersfield and Kern County.

A strong advocate for local control and personal responsibility, Ken believed in welfare reform that empowers individuals so that they could take control of their lives. He was also committed to making government more business friendly. He was an ardent protector of free speech and a defender of the Boy Scouts of America. An avid outdoorsman, he enjoyed golf, hunting, hiking and camping with his family.

Ken Peterson was an original. I was honored to know him and work with him. Ken will be missed.

RELATING TO CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 3009, ANDEAN TRADE PROMOTION AND DRUG ERADICATION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose H. Res. 450, an unprecedented and undemocratic "bill-in-a-rule" on our nation's trade policy.

Normally, the House passes a "rule" to specify the procedures for consideration of a bill. A "rule" for the consideration of a trade bill would determine how many amendments will be allowed and how long the debate will last before a final vote on the bill. H. Res. 450, however, is a "rule" that actually provides for the automatic passage of a 191-page trade bill. The Republican leadership is trying to force the Congress to pass a 191-page trade bill with no opportunity for amendments, no final vote on the bill and virtually no time for debate.

This 191-page "bill-in-a-rule" includes the text of H.R. 3005, the Republican Fast Track trade bill that was passed by the House on December 6, 2001, by a one-vote margin. H.R. 3005 is a trade bill that would sacrifice labor and environmental protection in the name of free trade.

H.R. 3005 would not require our trade negotiators to promote labor rights or protect the environment. It would not even require our trading partners to prohibit sweatshops, forced labor, child labor or slavery. Instead, it would allow our trading partners to weaken their environmental standards in order to gain a competitive advantage over the United States. It would also require our trade negotiators to expand the rights of foreign investors to sue governments and demand compensation for the impacts of public interest, food safety and environmental regulations. Clearly, H.R. 3005 would do more to promote corporate power than trade.

The Republican leadership's "bill-in-a-rule" also includes several trade provisions that have never been considered by Members of the House of Representatives. This "bill-in-a-rule" cannot be amended and has never been considered by any House committee with jurisdiction over any aspect of our nation's trade policy.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this "bill-in-a-rule" that attempts to expand corporate power without committee hearings, markups or amendments and only one hour of debate on the Floor of the people's House.

UPON THE OCCASION OF COST OF GOVERNMENT DAY

HON. ADAM H. PUTNAM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Speaker, this year Cost of Government Day falls on June 29. This date represents the day on which the average American worker has earned enough gross income to pay off his or her share of the tax and regulatory burdens imposed by all levels of government—federal, state and local.

The largest component of the Cost of Government is federal taxes, which account for 44 percent of your total cost of government. Federal regulation, state and local taxes each account for another 21 percent, with state and local regulation accounting for 13 percent.

Cost of Government Day is 2 days earlier than it was last year and lower than it has been in 5 years, since 1997. This is primarily due to the two tax cuts passed by Congress and championed by President George W. Bush. The Economic Growth and Tax Reform Reconciliation Act of 2001 (EGTRRA), enacted in May 2001, and the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002, enacted in March 2002 have moved Cost of Government Day in the right direction.

This decline is all the more remarkable because the United States is involved in a major military conflict, the war on terrorism, and is emerging from an economic slump. The economic downturn, which was almost certainly exacerbated by the September 11 terrorist attacks on New York and Washington, could have had a more negative effect on our recovery. Through the swift action of Congress and President Bush, appropriate policies to encourage economic growth, including reducing interest rates and taxes were implemented. Through the partnership of President Bush and Congress, America's workers, entrepreneurs and investors were given the means to put our economy on the road to recovery.

The Cost of Government is still substantially higher than during the 1980s, when President Reagan led the nation in bringing Cost of Government Day down to mid-June—returning to that level should be our goal.

A lower Cost of Government means more of the money produced by workers, investors and entrepreneurs is left in the hands of those who earned it; the taxpayer. A lower cost of government expands economic freedom for all Americans. A lower cost of government increases personal choice and control. A lower cost of government allows those participating in the economy to choose what to consume, how much to save or invest. Ultimately, a lower cost of government allows every American to improve their quality of life and to spend more of their hard earned money on the things most important to themselves and their family.

THE INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY PROTECTION ACT

HON. LAMAR S. SMITH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today is world Anti-Counterfeiting day.

Countries around the globe will highlight the growing problem of counterfeiting and the efforts by law enforcement and private industry to combat intellectual property theft.

Today I introduced a bill to address counterfeiting and copyright piracy. The Intellectual Property Protection Act will help protect American innovation and creativity.

The Intellectual property industry employs 4.3 million Americans, making it one of the largest sectors of the American economy—and a sector threatened everyday by copyright piracy.

Copyright piracy is illegal and puts Americans at risk of losing not just their jobs and economic well-being, but their safety, as well. The profits seized by these criminals are often used to fund other illegal activities, including terrorism.

News stories have revealed that terrorist organizations receive hundreds of millions of dollars through pirate operations. For example, police in Argentina and Paraguay uncovered a pirate CD business that has used its profits to underwrite terrorist activities for Hezbollah. The more we crack down on piracy, the more we dry up financial resources for terrorist operations.

Under current law, we can prosecute someone for trafficking in fake labels for a computer program, but we cannot prosecute someone for faking the hologram used by the software maker to verify that the software is genuine.

For instance, if a person manufactures fake covers for counterfeit CDs, he or she can be prosecuted. However, if that same person creates fake holograms to make buyers believe that the CDs are authentic, there is no recourse.

We have criminalized trafficking in counterfeit documentation and packing of software programs, but not music and other products.

The Intellectual Property Protection Act will criminalize the counterfeiting of authentication features, like holograms. In addition, the bill will expand criminal law, which currently only criminalizes trafficking in counterfeit documentation and packaging for software programs, to include documentation and packaging for music, motion pictures, and other audiovisual works.

This bill also will provide relief for victims of intellectual property crimes. Many of these crimes go unprosecuted today, leaving victims of these thefts without a way to recover their losses.

Last year, the retail software industry lost $1.8 billion and the business software industry lost $11 billion in revenue because of piracy. The motion picture industry lost $3 billion in potential worldwide revenue and the recording industry lost $4.3 billion worldwide due to piracy. These are staggering figures—especially considering there is no way to recover this lost revenue.

The legislation provides a private cause of action with a 3-year statute of limitations for victims to recover damages in federal court. In addition, if a person violates the anti-counterfeiting laws a second time within three years, treble damages will be available.

We must protect and encourage American originality and innovation. This bill goes a long way towards doing that.

RECOGNIZING THE HISPANIC ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES (HACU) NATIONAL INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

HON. SILVESTRE REYES

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, as Chair of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, I rise today to recognize the achievements of the Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities (HACU) National Internship Program and its federal and private-sector partners in providing Hispanic college students with invaluable real world working experiences that have allowed these students to make more educated career choices.

Over the past ten years, the HACU National Internship Program (HNIP) has introduced more than 3,800 Hispanic college students to meaningful paid internships with federal and corporate partners during the spring, summer and fall. This has become the largest Hispanic college college internship program in the United States.

The HACU National Internship Program exposes these students to public and private sector career opportunities and specifically helps address the historic under-representation of Hispanics in the federal work force. Many former interns are now full-time federal employees and managers, proving that the program truly is making a difference.

On July 10, 2002, the HACU National Internship Program will celebrate its 10th Anniversary at a "Red, White y Azul—Investing in the American Dream," Gala in Washington, D.C. This gala will showcase the achievements of former and current interns as part of a summer-long series of special events marking this remarkable program's first 10 years.

The HACU National Internship program began in 1992 with 24 interns. In 2001 alone, the program provided paid 10- and 15-week internships to 632 interns working at 19 federal agencies and five private corporations in Washington, D.C., and at locations throughout the United States. By the end of 2002, the program likely will set another record in the numbers of participating interns from throughout the country.

This competitive program selects top students from among HACU's 318 member and partner colleges and universities, which collectively serve more than two-thirds of all Hispanic students in higher education. This program provides meaningful work experiences to these students by matching their skills and career goals with the objectives of federal and corporate partners, enabling these students to make more informed career choices.

Based on formal program evaluations from students and supervisors, the HACU National Internship Program boasts a proven track record in positively addressing the underrepresentation of Hispanics in the federal work force. Ninety-five percent of students surveyed in 2001 rated their internship experience in the federal government as "excellent." More importantly, 73 percent of the 2001 summer students stated that they are interested in pursuing a career in federal service. Of those students, 82 percent said it was a direct result of their internship experience.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that Hispanics remain the only under-represented ethnic group in the federal government. As you know, Hispanics currently comprise 11.9 percent of the civilian labor force but only 6.7 percent of the permanent federal workforce. Recent reports also estimate that within the next five years, more than 50 percent of the current federal work force will become eligible to retire.

As the youngest and now largest ethnic population, Hispanics already make up one of every three new workers in the overall workforce, and by 2050 are projected to make up one of every two new workers. Thus, the HACU National Internship Program directly addresses both the historic under-representation of Hispanics in the federal labor force and the need to address the coming shortage of public service sector employees overall.

In addition, this program fully supports White House Executive Order 13171, which requests that federal agencies increase their outreach to the Latino community and support programs that help address the continuing under-representation of Hispanics in federal workforce ranks. The HACU National Internship Program is Point Four in the Office of Personnel Management Nine-Point Hispanic Employment Initiative as an effective, proven tool to recruit well-qualified Hispanics into the federal government.

I salute those who have made the HACU National Internship Program a success. Their efforts will continue to open the doors to opportunity for new generations of exceptional students while enhancing the diversity of our workforce.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO THE CITIZENS OF OTTAWA COUNTY ON THE DEDICATION OF THE NEW PERRY'S MEMORIAL VISITORS' CENTER

HON. PAUL E. GILLMOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to pay special tribute to those dedicated individuals from Ohio's Fifth Congressional District who made this new visitors' center at Perry's Memorial a reality.

Mr. Speaker, The new visitors center at Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial is a welcome addition to this to this wonderful park, and one that has been long sought.

The monument itself has long stood as an inspiring reminder of the enduring peace of nearly two centuries between the United States and Canada. It is a moving and educational destination for thousands of families.

The park and monument commemorate one of the most important and decisive battles in American history. The victory of Commodore Perry and American naval forces over the British off the shores of this island changed the course of American history, and facilitated the westward movement of our nation across the continent. It ushered in an unprecedented period of peace and friendship.

The visitors' center for the first time provides a means of explaining to visitors the significance of these events. It is the culmination of the efforts of many over a period of years. Some years ago I met with the leaders of the Perry Group, citizens joined together to promote this park, to begin discussions regarding the need for this center and how to achieve it. I commend the group and its strong leaders such as Judge George Smith and Ann Heidenreich Fisher for their tireless and successful work.

I was fortunate to obtain approximately two million dollars in federal funds so that this project could come to fruition, and I wish to thank my colleague, Congressman RALPH REGULA, for his invaluable help in making it happen. I also commend the superintendents at the park during this period for their efforts in support of this center, including our current Superintendent Ralph Moore, and his predecessors Dick Lusardi and Phyllis Ewing.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute to the diligent effort and unwavering spirit of those individuals determined to see this project through to completion. Our communities are served well by having such honorable and giving citizens who care about the education that future generations receive so that our historical landmarks are preserved well into the future. I am confident that this new visitors' center will serve as an educational tool for all, and be our link to a piece of American, and Ohio, history.

REAFFIRMING OUR SUPPORT FOR NATO AND ENLARGEMENT

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a Resolution which addresses the importance of NATO, its future, enlargement and continued U.S. support for the Alliance.

In just five months, the Heads of State and leadership of NATO will meet in Prague to, among other things, discuss the future of the Alliance and its capability to address new and emerging threats and to make a decision on the enlargement of the alliance. It has been eight months since the House of Representatives debated NATO enlargement and overwhelmingly passed the Gerald Solomon Freedom Consolidation Act.

Since then, there has been a great deal of debate within the Bush Administration, within the international community of experts and among the NATO partners with respect to NATO's future.

But since we last discussed whether new members should be invited into NATO, I felt we should take a moment to discuss exactly what type of alliance we will be inviting new members to join and what we believe the role of this alliance should be in the future. I also wanted to address the relationship between NATO and Russia which many Members raised during the House debate on the Solomon bill last November.

To that end, as Chairman of the Europe Subcommittee I held three comprehensive hearings on the question of NATO and enlargement. We heard from outside experts, we met with the Ambassadors of the ten candidate states and we heard from the Bush Administration and our SACEUR. The resolution I am introducing today is the work product of those hearings and all the other meetings and briefings which have taken place in between.

Clearly, NATO must maintain its political purpose and military coherence.

In this context, I disagree with those who believe that in this post-Cold War and post-September 11 era, NATO may no longer be relevant to the overall security of the United States.

NATO is indeed relevant to the U.S. NATO remains the foundation of American security policy in Europe. NATO has proven to be a strong and viable alliance preserving the collective security of Europe for over 53 years.

Back in 1949, when the Senate debated the ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty there was concern about what Article 5 would commit the U.S. to do in Europe. Isn't it ironic that the first time in 53 years Article 5 was invoked, as it was on September 12, it was invoked by our allies in defense of the U.S.

NATO was relevant in ending the brutal conflicts in both Bosnia and Kosovo. Today, our NATO Allies provide eighty percent of the military forces remaining in those countries. And, NATO, working with the European Union, was instrumental in helping resolve the problem in Macedonia before things got out of hand.

Since September 11, NATO's relevance has been clear with respect to the campaign against global terrorism and the war in Afghanistan. Although the Afghan campaign was never a NATO operation, fourteen of our allies from NATO, with some 5,000 troops are operating today side-by-side with U.S. military forces in Afghanistan as many of them have been since the first days of the conflict. Just last week command of the International Security Force transferred from British forces to Turkish forces, both NATO partners. Where would the U.S. effort be if these NATO partners considered themselves too irrelevant to help keep the peace in Afghanistan. Whose 5,000 troops would be patrolling the streets of Kabul if not for NATO forces.

I also disagree with those who believe that unless NATO is willing to undergo major restructuring to become a global rapid reaction force in the war on terrorism, it can no longer be relevant. Global terrorism and weapons of mass destruction are challenges worthy of NATO concern and capability to act against and NATO must seriously address these issues between now and Prague. But at the Ministers meeting in Reykjavik in May and the Defense Ministerial in June, NATO leaders did address the realities of the new and emerging threats and have committed, with strong U.S. support, to build the capabilities necessary to address them. For many, NATO does not have to be present in places like the Philippines, or Sudan or Kashmir or even Iraq to be relevant. These matters, while important, should not be seen as the only issues which define NATO for the future.

With respect to Russia, I believe the concerns expressed by some of our Colleagues last November and since then had great merit and needed to be clarified by NATO. At the Iceland summit, the U.S. and NATO initiated a new relationship with Russia which resulted in the formation of a new NATO-Russia Council which was inaugurated in June at the Rome summit between NATO heads of state and Russia President Putin. I believe this new relationship represents a breakthrough in NATO-Russia relations and should address the concerns of many.

Finally, an essential aspect of NATO is the welcoming of new members into the alliance.

I believe enlarging NATO does contribute to the overall security of the United States because membership in NATO does enhance overall European stability and security. We are encouraged by the number of applicants for NATO membership and their dedication and enthusiasm to achieving that goal. As we all know, there are ten applicant countries who have decided that NATO is certainly relevant to them and an organization in which they wish to be a member. But, NATO membership for them is more than joining a military alliance. For them, it will be a validation of their return to being democratic, European and pro-western states. The process under which these applicants are being evaluated, called the Member Action Plan, has been a useful tool for us to analyze their own commitment to meeting the political, economic and military standards expected of all members of the Alliance.

Mr. Speaker, my resolution addresses all of these issues in a comprehensive way. Our Subcommittee intends to mark this resolution in the Fall and will consider endorsing candidate countries for NATO membership at that time and based on the best information we have on their readiness to contribute to the overall security of the Alliance. It is my hope that the House Leadership will then make time for another opportunity to debate NATO and the enlargement issue.

Mr. Speaker, I believe NATO is as important for transatlantic security today than it was fifty-three years ago when it was created. I ask my Colleagues to cosponsor my resolution and to continue to support NATO.

SUPPORTING H.R. 4635—ARMING PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM ACT

HON. JIM MATHESON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. MATHESON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4635 the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism Act. This is a very sensible piece of legislation. We have a duty to provide pilots with the same tools shop keepers and mall security guards and others use in the protection of their property and the safety of their customers.

As the events of the morning of September 11 unfolded, the President gave the Air Force the authority to shoot down any commercial airline that did not respond to authorities. For the first time in our history, the American military had the authority to take action against American civilians.

That single horrible thought—that the United States government might have to use lethal force against American citizens who were unlucky enough to get on the wrong flight—should give us enough reason to pass this legislation.

Pilots need a last line of defense. They need the ability to defend the plane, the cockpit, and most of all, the passengers. We need to give our pilots the same opportunity for self-defense our Constitution provides to everyone else.

This is a good compromise. It is the product of good legislating workmanship by Chairman YOUNG, Chairman MICA, and Congressmen OBERSTAR and LIPINSKI. It is an example that debates about the Second Amendment need not be filled with mischaracterized rhetoric, but rather be premised on what's good for the American people.

HONORING STUDENTS, PARENTS, TEACHERS, AND ADMINISTRATORS
OF CSD 30

HON. JOSEPH CROWLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to acknowledge to the parents, teachers and students of Community School District 30 in Queens, NY.

Community School District 30, comprised of the neighborhoods of Sunnyside, Woodside, Astoria, Long Island City, Jackson Heights, and East Elmhurst is one of America's most diverse school districts and truly represents the face of America.

School District 30 serves some of the most diverse students in New York City and over 50 languages are spoken in the homes of the kids who go there.

A recent state-mandated report noted that the most recently reported test scores are among the best in the city.

In fact, for 2 years in a row, the district beat its target scores on State tests. And this year the suspension rate is down by 58.9 percent. These results are not coincidence. These results are because of the district's commitment to improving its schools. They employ innovative approaches to addressing the problems faced by all schools such as peer mediation and crisis intervention before students become a problem. Their Operation Return program, sends students with disciplinary problems to one school where they can get one-to-one counseling and receive excellent instruction in small groups. The program gives the kids confidence they need to succeed when they return to their permanent schools.

School District 30 is a wonderful story and credit is due to a lot of people, but one I would like to credit is superintendent, Dr. Angelo Gimondo. And also the wonderful United Federation of Teachers members who give their heart and soul to teaching the kids of School District 30. School District 30 can serve as an example, not only for other school districts, but also for us in Congress. School District 30 is an example of what happens when public officials—who provide adequate funding for educational programs—work with teachers, parents, and administrators to care for our young people.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN OF WINDSOR

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Town of Windsor in Sonoma County California as this community celebrates the tenth anniversary of its incorporation.

Windsor has been a prosperous rural community for more than 150 years. The first Post Office was established in 1855 and by the 1870s it was a regular stop on the railroad line. The town's first housing development was completed in the 1950s and by the 1970s, community leaders spearheaded an unsuccessful attempt to incorporate.

In 1992 the community was successful and Windsor officially became Sonoma County's ninth city on July 1, 1992. Since its incorporation, Windsor has invested city funds to improve roadways, utilities and public facilities.

The Senior Center and Community Center were dedicated in 1995. The Town's first library opened in 1996. A year later, the Town dedicated Pleasant Oak Park and began its first teen program. The Teen Center opened in 1999 and the Town Green was dedicated in 2001. The Town has drafted future plans for a new train station for commuter and excursion rail.

Since incorporation, the Town has been guided by dedicated public servants elected to the Town Council. Original council members were Julie Adamson, Maureen McDaniel, Allan Rawland, Joseph Rodota, and Barbara Siegler. The Council is currently served by Mayor Sam Salmon and members Steven Allen, Debora Fudge, Lynn Morehouse, and Steve Scott.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that we acknowledge and honor the Town of Windsor today as this pioneering community celebrates its tenth anniversary.

HONORING THE TELLEZ FAMILY

HON. HILDA L. SOLIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a very special family celebration that will take place on June 29, 2002, in the town of Clifton, Arizona. On Saturday, the Tellez family, many members of whom now reside in my district in California, will be honored for its dedication and service in valiantly defending our nation in the U.S. Armed Forces. The family will be recognized by the Hermanos de Vietnam, a division of the American Legion Post in Clifton, Arizona, for its combined 30 years of service in the U.S. military.

Remarkably, 11 out of the 15 family members have served in the military. The legacy began when Florencio Tellez, the family patriarch, served in the Army during World War I. His eight sons and two daughters followed in their father's footsteps.

Ruben and Florencio Tellez, Jr., both served in the U.S. Navy during World War II. Ruben Tellez served with the airborne division as a radio man, and Florencio, Jr., survived when his ship was struck by the Germans and sunk.

Raul, Joe and Gilbert Tellez all served in the Korean War. Raul and Joe were in the Navy and served on the same ship; Gilbert was a Marine who was wounded by enemy fire.

Richard Tellez, served in the Navy during the 1950s and continued as a reservist through Desert Storm.

His brothers Edward and Oscar "Duffy" Tellez served during the Cold War era. Edward was in the Air Force stationed in Iceland, and Oscar joined the Army and was stationed in Germany.

Florencio's two daughters also devoted themselves to the U.S. military. Stella Tellez was in the Marine Corps, and Katherine Tellez was in the Cadet Nurse Corps, a group that addressed the nursing shortage in civilian hospitals.

This remarkable family has given more to our nation than anyone would ever have thought possible. I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring the Tellez family for their valiant and courageous service to our country.

NEW LOWS FOR RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN UZBEKISTAN

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, over the past several weeks, Uzbek authorities have increased the harassment and suppression of religious groups viewed as a threat to the government's control of society. Uzbek authorities have systematically sought to stifle all aspects of religious life, including Muslim and Christian. It is currently believed that nearly 7,000 individuals are jailed for alleged crimes related to their religious affiliation or beliefs. Human rights organizations estimate that during the past year Uzbek courts convicted roughly 30 people a week under trumped-up charges.

Unfortunately, the list keeps growing. At the end of May, police arrested Yuldash Rasulov, a well-known human rights defender and devout Muslim. Rasulov's work through the Human Rights Society of Uzbekistan focused on government actions against Muslims choosing to worship outside the government-approved religious system. According to Human Rights Watch, officials charged Rasulov with "religious extremism," claiming he recruited Islamic militants to work toward overthrowing the state. Notably, a search of his home reportedly found nothing of an incriminating nature. Since being arrested, Rasulov has been held in incommunicado detention.

Authorities also targeted Musharaf Usamnova, the widow of a prominent Muslim activist Farhod Usmanov. Her husband was reportedly murdered in an isolation cell while in government custody in 1999. Uzbek officials arrested Musharaf in April, bringing over 50 men to ensure her capture, and her situation is unknown at this time. Soon thereafter, the government arrested several other women who were protesting the long prison sentences given to relatives and Muslim activists. The court sentenced these women to jail terms, some up to four years.

Adding to the concern about the treatment of these individuals is the rampant torture throughout the Uzbek "justice" system. Once in custody, many are savagely tortured and beaten in hopes of securing self-incriminating statements or evidence against other suspects. To ensure convictions, police authorities plant evidence on innocent individuals, such as weapons, drugs or banned religious propaganda. Judges hand out harsh prison sentences, despite claims of pervasive torture. Furthermore, prison conditions are abominable, infested with disease and pestilence. Individuals imprisoned on religious offenses are reportedly treated extraordinarily harsh; persons wishing to pray are subjected to further beatings and harassment. Incommunicado detention and disappearances of individuals also occur.

Also of serious concern are the extrajudicial executions that transpired over the past year. Human rights organizations reported on the deaths of five individuals while in police custody. Despite some Uzbek Government reports listing the cause of death as "heart attack" or "brain tumor," the open wounds, broken bones and multiple bruises on the corpses tell a very different story. Clearly, there is much cause to worry about the safety of all individuals in prison.

Besides physical arrests, the legal regime governing religious groups is designed to repress religious activity. Through these laws and regulations, the government places religious groups in an untenable situation. The government seems to allow approved mosques to operate and permits Christian communities to exist in relative peace (if they do not attempt to proselytize indigenous groups not traditionally Christian). Otherwise, for other religious groups, obtaining official recognition is nearly impossible, and the real threat of government repression looms large.

The 1998 Freedom of Conscience and Religious Organizations law instituted registration requirements designed to make achieving official recognition next to impossible. The 1999 amendments to the criminal code increased the importance of registration, as individuals attending an unregistered group are potentially subject to three to five years imprisonment for belonging to an "illegal" group. Individuals caught attending meetings of "banned" religious communities risk up to 20 years imprisonment. Uzbek courts frequently hand down lengthy prison sentences for alleged participation in illegal or banned groups. In addition, the religion law bans religious free speech and private religious instruction, and only permits government approved clerics to wear religious dress.

In recent weeks, Uzbek authorities appear more willing to use these provisions to repress unwanted groups and silence dissent.

Most recently, on May 25th, Uzbek officials raided the Mir Protestant Church in the Karakalpakstan region in western Uzbekistan. The raid, justified because the church is unregistered, interrupted a service and recorded the names of individuals representing local nationalities, such as Kazakhs and Uzbeks. Authorities ordered individuals of those ethnic groups to appear in court to explain their participation. While the court did not impose a fine, in a similar case in the same region, a court did fine four members of the New Life Church for violating the law on religious organizations.

Similarly, due to an inability to register, the small Christian community in Muinak has been denied permission to meet. According to Keston News Service, church members are now forced to meet in secret. Furthermore, the leaders of the Jehovah's Witnesses in the town of Bukhara could be sentenced to five years in jail for leading an "illegal" religious service, as their community is unregistered. In addition, in May a Tashkent court found a Jehovah's Witness guilty and fined him for illegal religious teaching when he was caught praying at a friend's funeral.

Even more alarming was the request by the Uzbek Committee for Religious Affairs that Protestant groups stop preaching the Uzbek language, the country's official language.

Mr. Speaker, the overall situation for religious freedom, and human rights generally, in Uzbekistan is bleak. Despite US involvement in the region, the recent increase of government efforts to suppress unrecognized religious groups is deeply troubling. Consequently, I urge the Uzbek Government to honor its commitments as a participating State in the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

WILLIAM F. GOODLING EVEN START FAMILY LITERACY PRO- GRAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to offer a bill today that will support the learning opportunities of our most vulnerable children by supporting their literacy training from their very earliest days until they are in school.

These are children of families who qualify for Even Start because they are low socioeconomic families who may also be English learners.

Without the existing William F. Goodling Even Start Family Literacy Program, these children would arrive for their first day of school without the literacy skills to compete at that starting line. Even those who were able to get a scarce place in the Head Start program, would find that, hard as they worked through their school years, they were unlikely ever to catch up.

The population served by Even Start generally has low levels of education, with 86 percent of parents not having completed high school upon entering the program (compared to about 27 percent of Head Start parents). Eighty percent of participants have a family income below $15,000 and over 40 percent have income below $6,000. This is a high need population.

What the program offers is both literacy-training classes for the children and also family literacy programs for the parents. Children participating in Even Start are provided with age-appropriate educational services to ensure that they will achieve at a level similar to that of their peers. Liaison advisors work with each family to promote strong literacy support experiences, to help parents learn ways they can develop their own English literacy skills, and to provide support groups for parents to share the challenges and skills of parenting.

Adults in these family literacy programs tend to participate longer than those in regular adult education programs because of the benefits family literacy programs provide to their children. They see benefits such as improved literacy skills, reduced dependency on federal/state assistance programs, and enhanced employment opportunities. Most importantly, they are empowered to be their child's first and most important teacher.

Nationally, Even Start funds approximately 1,400 programs and serves approximately 50,000 families.

This bill will set aside funding to establish nationwide programs to assist in the training of program directors and facilitators in research-based literacy training skills. Because of new legislation, particularly the new qualifications for personnel, the performance objectives, and the new "scientifically-based reading research" requirement for instructional programs, local Even Start programs need this type of assistance.

Additionally, I have requested an evaluation to provide a longitudinal look at the achievement of children who have been assisted by the program.

When I have visited Even Start classes for children and for their parents, it is overwhelming to hear their expressions of appreciation for the program and its leaders. Adults expressed amazement at the change in their children's feeling about reading and learning when they made reading together a regular part of their day. One mother told me how she thought she couldn't help her five year old with reading, but, thanks to the program, she realized that it was good for them to read together and help each other with the words each didn't know.

President Bush has declared that an additional step in his efforts to reform education will be to prod parents, day-care centers and preschools to teach more skills to children before they get to kindergarten. Even Start provides just such a program for parents to develop the literacy skills enabling them to perform this task.

All children deserve an even start. This bill will assure that they have well-trained facilitators to give their families the skills to compete fairly at the starting line.

at his home, surrounded by his loved ones, early on June 26th. Dan was a talented businessman, a lifelong scholar, and a devoted father and husband; I was proud to call him my friend. His passing leaves a great void in our lives.

Dan was only 44 years old. He was compassionate, but cancer is not. It strikes tragically, without warning or reason. His future was staggeringly full of possibility, and I am so saddened to think of how much more Dan had to experience and give.

Dan was a brilliant man. He was a top graduate of Princeton University and a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford. We marveled at his intelligence, his insight, and his ability to see problems in new ways. His mind was always the mind of a scholar, deeply fascinated by the complexity of finance and economics. He possessed a sharp and subtle intellect that was uniquely suited to business but never confined by it.

Dan was a star in the business world, rising to become one of the most important business leaders in the nation. As Chairman and CEO of Hambrecht & Quist during the height of the new technology boom, Dan helped to finance hundreds of companies, including Genentech, Netscape, Adobe, and other leaders in the high technology field. Under his leadership, Hambrecht & Quist grew to become a powerful financial player, providing resources and guidance for emerging companies in a wide range of technology areas. In 1999, Dan presided over Hambrecht & Quist when it was acquired by JPMorgan Chase. After the merger, Dan continued to advise and fund emerging companies.

Dan's intelligence was only surpassed by his character. His friends and family respected him for his foresight and genius but loved him for his kindness and modesty. He was a caring husband, father, son, and brother. He gave back to the community in countless ways, donating generously to a number of community organizations, including the San Francisco Exploratorium, the San Francisco Ballet, and the United Way. Always committed to education and learning, Dan worked with other technology industry leaders to improve public education and played an important role in passing Proposition 39, the California school bonds initiative. After he was diagnosed with cancer, he founded ABC2, which funds research aimed at finding a cure for brain cancer.

To his wife Stacey, to his four children, Alexander, Winston, John Daniel, and Charlotte, to his parents, Dan and Carol, to his brothers Steve and Jeff, and his sister Carin, I extend my deepest sympathies. I hope that it is a comfort to Dan's family that so many people share their loss and are praying for them at this sad time.

TRIBUTE TO NORMAN W. JETER OF HAYS, KANSAS

HON. JERRY MORAN
OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to pay tribute to Mr. Norman Jeter on his 90th birthday.

There are few in my hometown that do not know Mr. Jeter. He came to Hays, Kansas 65 years ago, in the midst of the Great Depression, after graduating from the University of Kansas School of Law. Despite the difficulty of the times, he boarded the train for Hays with the hope that the western Kansas community would someday be a great town. Indeed, Hays grew into a thriving community, the home of an excellent university, and the commercial center of northwest Kansas. Along the way, Hays residents benefitted from the personal and professional advice of Norman Jeter.

Over the years, Mr. Jeter became a leading member of the Kansas legal community, representing small businesses, independent oil and gas producers, and farmers and ranchers. He was also elected Ellis County attorney in 1938 and held the position for many years. His dedication to his profession and his knowledge of the law are respected throughout the State. He is the kind of elder statesman that every profession needs.

I am fortunate to have had the pleasure of practicing law with Mr. Jeter. As a young attorney, I quickly came to admire his keen mind, integrity and dignity. Working with Mr. Jeter taught me a great deal about the practice of law, but even more about being a good person. I know that I am a better for having known and worked with him.

Throughout his lifetime, Norman Jeter has worked to improve the quality of life in his hometown and state. The residents of Hays, Kansas have access to first-rate medical treatment and facilities due in no small part to the leadership of Norman Jeter. For nearly 60 years, he has served on the board of directors of Hays hospitals, much of that time as chairman. During his tenure he saw the combination of two local hospitals to create a regional medical center with greatly expanded services and quality of care. He continues to serve on the Board of the Hays Regional Medical Center, working to provide the residents of Northwest Kansas with progressively better healthcare.

Mr. Jeter's contributions to Kansas education are no less notable. He worked hard to improve Hays schools as a member of the school board, and later worked just as hard to improve the higher education system in Kansas as a member and chairman of the Kansas Board of Regents.

He has been recognized repeatedly for a lifetime of distinguished public service. He is a recipient of the Fort Hays State University Distinguished Service Award, as well as the Kansas School of Law Distinguished Alumnus Award. Mr. Jeter is a member of the Hays Chamber of Commerce Hall of Fame, a recipient of the Governor's Art Award, and has been presented with the Albert Einstein Medal of Peace. In addition, the Hays Medical Center bestows an honor that bears his name, the Norman W. Jeter Humanitarian Award.

Most important to Norman Jeter is his family. He and his wife Ann have instilled in their children Margaret, John, Joe, and Bill the same values with which they have lived their lives. Their children have all gone on to lead successful careers in their given field. John is the chief executive officer of Hays Medical Center. Margaret is an attorney in Kansas City, Missouri, while Joe and Bill practice law with their father.

IN HONOR OF DANIEL H. CASE III

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Daniel H. Case III, who died peacefully

Norman Jeter has led a truly remarkable life, serving his community as he has lived—with distinction, intelligence, and honor. Norman Jeter is proof that the practice of the law can still be an honorable profession and that service to one's community can still make a difference. I would ask that my colleagues join me today in paying tribute to Norman Jeter on the occasion of his 90th birthday.

DRUG POLICY

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I highly recommend the attached article "Unintended Consequences" by Thomas G. Donlan, from Barron's magazine, to my colleagues. This article provides an excellent explanation of the way current federal drug policy actually encourages international terrorist organizations, such as Al Qaeda, to use the drug trade to finance their activities. Far from being an argument to enhance the war on drugs, the reliance of terrorist organizations upon the drug trade is actually one more reason to reconsider current drug policy. Terrorist organizations are drawn to the drug trade because federal policy still enables drug dealers to reap huge profits from dealing illicit substances. As Mr. Donlan points out, pursuing a more rational drug policy would remove the exorbitant profits from the drug trade and thus remove the incentive for terrorists to produce and sell drugs.

In conclusion, I once again recommend Mr. Donlan's article to my colleagues. I hope the author's explanation of how the war on drugs is inadvertently strengthening terrorist organizations will lead them to embrace a more humane, constitutional and rational approach to dealing with the legitimate problems associated with drug abuse.

UNINTENDED CONSEQUENCES

(By Thomas G. Donlan)

It's harvest time in Afghanistan. While the delegates to its grand council, the loya jurga, met under the great tent in Kabul and grudgingly acknowledged Hamid Karza as the president of a "transitional government," the impoverished farmers of Afghanistan reaped the rewards of their best cash crop, the despised opium poppy.

A few months ago, newspaper correspondents reported that the American proconsuls in Afghanistan had abandoned their hopes of reducing the opium harvest. They had considered buying the crop or paying farmers to destroy their poppies, but concluded that in the lawless Afghan hinterland they would simply be paying a bonus for non-delivery.

Karzai's previous "interim administration" had banned opium production, but its writ did not run many miles beyond the city of Kabul. Warlords and provincial governors did as they pleased, and they were pleased to tax the opium trade and indeed participate in it as traders and transporters and protectors.

That's what the Taliban did for most of the years that the mullahs ruled and protected the al Qaeda terrorist network. In 2000, Afghanistan accounted for 71% of the world's opium supply. (Opium in turn is the building block for heroin, which most drug-fighters believe takes the greatest human toll and provides the greatest profit in the whole illicit industry.)

In 2001, the Taliban decreed an end to opium cultivation, not so much to carry favor with the West but to maintain the price: A bumper crop provided enough for two years of commerce. Indeed, the Taliban and al Qaeda may have earned more from their stockpiles in 2001 than they did from high production in 2000.

"As ye sow, so shall ye reap." The Biblical passage is an apt reminder that America's undercover agents nurtured Islamic fundamentalism to strengthen Afghan resistance to the Soviet Union. We reaped chaos in Afghanistan and a corps of well-trained fanatics bent on our destruction. America has also sown a war on drugs, and those same fanatics have harvested the profits.

This was not what we intended. Nor did we intend to let huge profits earned by terrorists and common criminals be used to corrupt police in every country where the trade reaches, including our own. Nor did we intend to put hundreds of thousands of Americans in prison for their participation in the drug trade. Nor did we intend to create periodic drug scarcities that turn addicts to crime to pay for their habits.

But all those things are unintended consequences of the war on drugs. Drug use is eventually a self-punishing mistake; the drug war turns out to be the same.

Now the war on drugs and the war on terrorism are beginning to look like two currents in a single river. Nearly half of the international terrorist groups on the State Department's list are involved in drug trafficking, either to raise money for their political aims or because successful drug commerce requires a ruthlessness indistinguishable from terrorism.

The currents don't always run together: The FBI and other federal law enforcement agencies acknowledge that the extra resources they are devoting to the detection and apprehension of terrorists are not new resources; the money agents and equipment come to the war on terror at the expense of the war on drugs.

In the domestic war on drugs, officials are trying to make the two currents serve their purposes. The government runs TV ads portraying young Americans confessing, "I killed grandmas. I killed daughters. I killed firemen. I killed policemen," and then warning the viewers, "Where do terrorists get their money? If you buy drugs, some of it may come from you."

Bummer.

Like they wanted to do that? The buyers of drugs would be perfectly happy to buy them in a clean, well-lit store at reasonable prices, with the profits heavily taxed to support schools, medical benefits, or any other legitimate function of government—even police. That's how they buy cigarettes and liquor, neither of which finances international terrorists. (In a current prosecution, smuggling cigarettes from low-tax North Carolina to high-tax Michigan allegedly raised $1,500 for an alleged affiliate of Hamas. But big violence needs bigger sums from more lucrative sources.)

It was bad when drug laws gave the Mafia an opportunity to do big business. It was worse when the laws encouraged Colombian and Mexican drug cartels to obtain aircraft and heavy weapons. Now that the drug laws provide profits to people who want to kill Americans wholesale instead of retail, it's time to change the laws.

Using drugs is stupid enough; making the users finance international terrorists is even more foolish.

TRIBUTE TO CARROLL "BUD" FAIRCLO

HON. GREG WALDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding Oregonian and authentic American hero, Carroll "Bud" Fairclo. A native of Dairy, Oregon in the 2nd Congressional District, Bud was a devoted family man, a well-loved member of his community, a fierce warrior, and most of all, an unwavering patriot.

Mr. Speaker, Bud Fairclo served during World War II as a member of Company L of the 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Infantry Division of the Fifth and Seventh Armies. As an infantryman with the 3rd Division, which fought in campaigns across North Africa, Sicily, and Italy under Generals George S. Patton and Mark W. Clark, Bud saw some of the heaviest fighting of the war during a period when Germany's defeat was by no means certain. Bud participated in countless engagements, and though he performed with distinction in combat many times, his heroism on one occasion was particularly conspicuous.

On November 9th, 1943, near Mignano, Italy, Bud silenced three German pillboxes with a volley of grenades and rifle fire, saving many of his countrymen from the murderous fire of the enemy. He then single-handedly halted a German counterattack and was under constant enemy fire for nearly 18 hours until relief arrived. While he was severely wounded during this action, Bud refused evacuation to treat his injuries. Later he volunteered for observation post duty to direct mortar fire that silenced two remaining pillboxes that had fired on his unit throughout the night.

On April 11th, 1944 General Mark W. Clark presented Bud Fairclo with the Distinguished Service Cross for his extraordinary heroism in action, a decoration second only to the Medal of Honor. Bud's uncommon valor earned him not only the distinction of being one of Oregon's most highly decorated veterans, but the enduring gratitude of the nation he fought so heroically to defend.

Like so many unassuming heroes of his generation, Bud Fairclo loved his country deeply, served it courageously in our Nation's darkest hour, and then quietly returned to civilian life, expecting neither recognition nor reward for his valiant service. Bud went on to father five children and run a horse-ranch in the Klamath Basin for more than half a century. While I never had the opportunity to meet Bud before his passing in 1997, like every child of the post-war world I have lived and breathed the freedom that he and his comrades bequeathed to us.

Mr. Speaker, on July 4th, I will have the distinct honor of presenting a framed set of Bud's military decorations to the Fairclo family as part of a ceremony dedicating the Mid-Columbia Veterans Memorial in The Dalles, Oregon.

I will make this presentation with a profound and lasting reverence for the sacrifices he and his fellow veterans made on behalf of the generations that would follow them.

Today as our Nation faces a new war and young men and women across this great land answer their country's call to service, it is the heroism and selflessness of men like Bud Fairclo that will inspire them to great and noble feats. As we observe the birth of our Nation and commemorate the contributions Bud and others have made in defending it, we do so in humble recognition of the debt we owe to them—a debt that no riches or tributes could ever hope to repay.

BAY CITY POLICE CAPTAIN DAVE BRUBAKER: A LAWMAN'S LIFE

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the life and mourning the death of retired Bay City Police Captain Dave Brubaker. When Dave passed away, his three children lost a wonderful father, his wife, Diane, lost a loving soul mate, the citizens of Bay City lost a committed public servant and I lost a friend.

Dave befriended all who crossed his path, including me. In fact, I often crossed his path as he was patrolling the streets of Bay City. His greeting was always the same. He immediately activated the flashing lights of his squad car. Whenever Dave saw me ever so slightly exceeding the posted speed limit, he'd pull me over. We'd share our latest deer hunting stories, then he'd let me go with a stern warning to slow down, a warning I naturally ignored until the next time Dave pulled me over.

Anyone who knew Dave quickly developed an appreciation for his good-natured sense of humor. Wherever he went, his natural charisma and outgoing nature drew people to him. He was always the center of attention and the life of the party. In fact, no one would have appreciated more than Dave the notion to pay tribute to him with a Fourth of July celebration and fireworks display.

Dave was also a serious and dedicated public servant who never swayed from his duty to protect and defend our community. He was a devoted husband, father and grandfather. Above all, Dave cared deeply about people and never missed an opportunity to show it. The sense of loss for his wife, Diane, his three daughters and their husbands, his grandchildren and extended family certainly will never go away. Perhaps Dave's family can take solace in knowing that his fellow officers, his friends and the entire community are better off for having made Dave's acquaintance. We all miss him.

Mr. Speaker, in the aftermath of the tragedies of Sept. 11, every community has a better understanding of the debt owed to law enforcement officers like Captain Dave Brubaker. Dave did his duty with a firm hand and understanding heart. His life's work is his badge of honor and his legacy will continue to inspire all public servants. Please join me in remembering and honoring Captain Dave Brubaker.

CELEBRATING THE REHABILITA-TION AND PRESERVATION OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING AT EL RANCHO VERDE APARTMENTS

HON. ZOE LOFGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, today we rise to celebrate the El Rancho Verde Apartments, the largest preservation of affordable housing in the Western United States. This outstanding, $117 million effort has truly been a community effort to preserve affordable housing for families who could not otherwise afford the high cost of living in Silicon Valley. We commend the efforts on the part of several groups: The Related Companies of California; Community Housing Developers, Inc.; City of San Jose Housing Department; State of California Housing Finance Agency; State of California Treasurer's Office and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

Built in 1970, El Rancho Verde was at risk of being converted to market-rate property at the expiration of existing HUD Use Agreements. Now, this affordable housing will be preserved for a minimum of 55 years.

This rehabilitation project—considered by city, state and federal housing officials to be a model for the nation—preserves 700 low income two and three-bedroom apartments on 36 acres, enabling families to live in San Jose who otherwise might not be able to afford it.

We would especially like to applaud state officials, who gave this development the second largest ever allocation of tax-exempt bonds for multifamily housing to date.

Recognizing that childcare is another critical issue for low-income families, we commend the commitment to the East Side community in form of structural improvements to the adjacent child development center, El Rancho Verde Child Development Center. The Center serves 75 children, ages 3 to 10, most of whom live at the El Rancho apartments.

Thanks to the efforts of The Related Companies of California and Community Housing Developers, Inc., approximately 3,000 people—1,500 hundred of them children—will have a home in San Jose.

We wish to thank The Related Companies of California and Community Housing Developers, Inc., for their commitment to making San Jose affordable for all families.

TRIBUTE TO THE 16TH ANNUAL MAR ADDAI CHALDEAN CHURCH FESTIVAL

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the Chaldean American community of Michigan, who celebrated the 16th Annual Mar Addai Chaldean Church Festival on Sunday, June 23, 2002.

As Michigan is home to a thriving Chaldean American community, we have the opportunity to recognize the accomplishments and contributions of a fabulous people. They possess a focused vision of their future and will do all they feel is necessary to ensure prosperity.

Today, the United States is enriched by the many Chaldean Americans who have made this country their home. As one of the largest communities in Michigan, Chaldean Americans are making their mark, serving as hard working members of the civic, business, and professional communities. They have made major contributions to nearly every facet of American society. The Chaldean American community of Michigan truly adds to the wonderfully diverse American culture by sharing with us their customs, traditions and beliefs.

The 16th Annual Mar Addai Chaldean Church Festival attests to the wealth of the culture we have developed here in Michigan. An all day festival of food, music, dancing, and fun, the Mar Addai Festival is attended by thousands of Chaldean and non-Chaldean people and is one of the largest and most successful family festivals in Oakland County. The spirit and enthusiasm of the Chaldean American community of Southeastern Michigan has been such an invaluable asset to our great state, and will surely continue to bring families and communities together for many years to come.

I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Chaldean American community of Michigan on this landmark day, and I salute them all for their tremendous contributions and support.

HONORING MARY "BILLY" BOATWRIGHT

HON. ROB SIMMONS

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, Mary "Billy" Boatwright, a wife, a mother, an athlete, a newspaper reporter, a tireless advocate of better education, and a member of the National Republican Committee for nearly two decades, passed away on May 31 at the age of 82, a victim of cancer. She was a model Republican, a woman of principle, and an integral part of my hometown, Stonington, Connecticut. Her family and friends mourn her and remember the way in which she gave her life to her community.

Billy Boatwright was a role model for me and for the many people whose lives she touched. Friends who confided in her did so in faith. Candidates who sought her advice found a ready ear and a bright mind. Many of us can look back on our lives and find a person upon whose advice and counsel we built our careers and forged our ideals. For the people of Stonington Billy was that person.

Billy believed in loyalty and was willing to elevate principle above party lines. Her decision to oppose a party nominee for Governor and support instead a lifelong friend forced her to give up her seat on the Republican National Committee. She also vacated her seat on the Stonington Republican Town Committee. In her absence the Committee made the decision not to fill her seat. After the election, Republican leaders invited her to return. This is one of many examples of the respect in which she was held by her peers.

Mr. Speaker, politics does not build character. It reveals it. Those of us who knew Billy Boatwright had the honor of knowing a woman of the highest character, the image of honesty and learning, a woman who understood the importance of serving the interests of the public. She will be greatly missed. We are fortunate to have been a part of her life and even more fortunate that she was a part of ours. I would like to submit Westerly Sun columnist Jeff Mill's story on her legacy for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the Westerly Sun]

STONINGTON LOSES "BILLY" BOATWRIGHT, POLITICAL LEGEND

(By Jeff Mill)

Mary H. "Billy" Boatwright, a power in Republican politics on the national, state and local levels and an integral part of Stonington life for over 40 years, has died.

Boatwright, who had been ill in recent months, succumbed to cancer Friday. She was 82.

A wife, mother, sportswoman, newspaper reporter, staunch advocate of reading and learning, and member of the Republican National Committee for 17 years, she was described as "a life force" in Stonington since moving here with her husband, Victor, in 1957.

Expressions of sympathy and admiration flowed in Saturday, as word spread of her death. (An obituary appears in the obituary section of the online Sun.)

"She was really a remarkable woman," declared Andrew W. Maynard, the warden—a post akin to mayor—of Stonington Borough. "Her death is certainly an enormous loss to the Borough and really to the entire area of southeastern Connecticut."

Spare and direct, Boatwright was the grand doyenne of Republican politics in town and throughout the region. Candidates on the local and state levels regularly sought her out for advice and counsel. Those who didn't rarely succeeded.

Yet, she was equally at home every August behind tables sagging with books in the Borough's Wadawanuck Square as part of the Stonington Community Center's annual Village Fair. She ran the book tables for years, and they became known as "Billy's Books."

Second District U.S. Rep. Robert R. Simmons, R-Stonington, was one of those who went to Boatwright for advice.

"As a Republican, she was a great leader," he said. "I think she was the first woman to represent Stonington in the General Assembly, back when that was not an easy thing to do."

"She was a staunch member of the Republican Town Committee and a great mentor to people like me and Michael Blair (a former Borough warden) who wanted to get involved in politics but didn't know how. She really was an extraordinary woman."

"She loved to travel, and she had so many friends, and she was quite independent," said her daughter Mary T. "Tolly" Boatwright. "She was so devoted to so many things—to her country and the democratic process and to the Republican Party. And yet, she never followed anything blindly."

Boatwright was, for instance, a strong and loyal supporter of Gov. Lowell P. Weicker

Jr., even when that became unfashionable in some circles. It was a measure of her loyalty that she bolted the Republican Party to join Weicker's A Connecticut Party—and in doing so gave up her seat on the Republican National Committee.

"I would put her, literally, in a handful—and I mean five people—who were the greatest influences in my career," the former governor said Saturday evening from his Virginia home.

"She had enormous integrity and a great sense of humor, and she was one of the most loyal people I know," Weicker said, noting that Boatwright gave up her seat on the RNC "when just about any Republican woman in the state would have died for that seat. But that was Mary."

"Every leader should be surrounded by people with that integrity (who are willing to relay bad news even) when you don't want to hear it."

Simmons recalled that when she resigned from the party to back Weicker's independent run for governor, "I was chairman, and the town committee decided not to fill her seat. After the election, she was invited to come back and occupy the seat. That's just one sign of the respect in which she was held by her fellow Republicans."

Her son, Bill Boatwright, mentioned another instance in which his mother remained loyal—to Richard Nixon, whom she first met during her postwar career as a newspaperwoman at the San Francisco Chronicle. He said "she supported him and remained very hopeful that his policies" would achieve the recognition she felt they deserved.

"As an individual, she would follow the strength of her convictions," he said.

William S. Brown, a selectman and chairman of the Republican Town Committee, recalled Boatwright as "a lovely lady. She was very bright and intelligent and a stalwart Republican."

Respect and affection for Mrs. Boatwright crossed party lines.

James M. Spellman, a Pawcatuck Democrat, was often in Mrs. Boatwright's sights during the 24 years that he served as Stonington's first selectman. And yet, he praised her Saturday, saying, "Mary was an outstanding citizen of Stonington. She was very knowledgeable, and she always quietly offered her time for many different programs. It could be the (Stonington) Community Center, the town of Stonington, or Westerly Hospital. But I believe her first love, no doubt, was politics, in which she played a major role on the local, state and national level."

"I always admired her," Spellman continued, "because she knew the issues and she worked in the best interests of our area, and I respected her as a friend and a political opponent."

Boatwright was by equal parts direct and humorous. She did not suffer fools gladly, but she could be supportive and funny—often devastatingly so.

Her youngest daughter, Tolly Boatwright, recalled just such an incident during World War II, when her mother drove a tractor at the North Island, Calif., Naval Station.

"She met Eleanor Roosevelt once and Mrs. Roosevelt said how interesting her job must be," Tolly said. "And mother said she had only learned two things—how to swear and how to spit, although I think she already knew how to swear."

Tolly reflected that it "had to be a trial" for such a dedicated Republican to meet the staunchly Democratic first lady.

Maynard spoke of "her enormous influence and commitment to the Borough and around the state."

"She had such dedication to her community and to her church," Maynard said. "She was so dedicated to the (Stonington Free) Library, to the cause of learning and to volunteer work, and she did all that with great enthusiasm."

"I think of her just now standing in front of the (Borough) post office, speaking with someone and with her head thrown back in a laugh. It's really sad to think of her no longer being with us."

"She had a lot of energy, and she generated enthusiasm," First Selectman Peter N. Dibble said. "She cared deeply for the people she befriended, and there certainly were many people in this community who benefited from her friendship."

"For those of us involved in politics, she was a party stalwart who touched the lives of many of us, but she did not limit herself to partisan politics. She helped numerous people in public life regardless of party lines."

Maynard, Simmons, and Tolly Boatwright all mentioned a love of knowledge that pervaded Boatwright's life.

"Mother really cared about people no matter their age," Tolly Boatwright said. "And if a child made the honor roll, she would cut out the (newspaper article about it) and send it to the parents. She championed children and academic achievement, and doing the best they can."

Simmons said his daughter was one of those who received a clipping and a note of encouragement.

Boatwright's love of learning extended throughout her entire life.

"She had an amazing intellectual curiosity that she carried even into her later years," Maynard said. "In her 70s, I would see her still expanding her mind" as they took courses at Connecticut College.

Maynard is a Democrat, but he said "even though she was a vigorous partisan, I had such a regard for her willingness to stay involved. I just had the greatest regard for her."

THE NEED TO SUPPORT PASSENGER RAIL

HON. MICHAEL R. McNULTY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, while the other countries of the industrialized world continue to support passenger rail services with 'High Speed' and 'Bullet' trains, the current Administration continues to nickel and dime Amtrak.

Last fall, this Administration and this Congress came to the rescue of our airline industry to the tune of $15 billion. But when Amtrak asks for little more than 1 percent of that to cover its short term operating costs, the President hesitates.

This Administration is proposing retroactive repeal of the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT), sending $25 billion in rebate checks to the richest corporations in the world. The rebate check to IBM alone would be $1.4 billion. That one check would keep the trains moving in America for all of next year.

Mr. Speaker, this is a disgrace!

The Administration should immediately release the funds necessary to keep Amtrak in service.

RECOGNIZING THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF DR. MURRAY ROSS TO THE U.S. CONGRESS ON HEALTH POLICY

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Dr. Murray Ross for his 14 years of service to the U.S. Congress at both the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission and the Congressional Budget Office.

MedPAC is the advisory panel to Congress that provides guidance on Medicare payment policies. Dr. Ross has served with distinction as MedPAC's founding executive director, providing outstanding policy analysis and exceptional service to Members of Congress and their staff.

Before MedPAC, he served as unit chief for the Health Cost Estimates Unit of the Congressional Budget Office, directing his staff in developing key spending and cost estimates for the Congress.

Prior to becoming the director of the health unit, Dr. Ross served as a principal analyst in CBO's Health and Human Resources Division, providing important analyses of health reform and income security policies.

While I may not have always agreed with the advice and analysis received from MedPAC or CBO during his tenure, I speak for many when I say that we always knew Murray was shooting straight with us and doing his best to see that we were provided accurate information in a timely manner.

It is with pleasure that I join the congressional and health policy communities in commending Murray Ross for his service to the Congress and America, in thanking him for his professionalism, and in wishing him well in his new endeavors.

I also welcome Murray to the San Francisco Bay area and look forward to working with him to improve health care in my home community.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. RUBÉN HINOJOSA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was unavoidably detained in my Congressional District. Had I been present, I would have voted yes on rollcalls 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256 and 257.

ALLEN J. KAYNER: SETTING THE PACE FOR BAY COUNTY

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the life and mourning the death of Allen J. Kayner, a teacher and coach for untold high school athletes and students in the Bay City Public Schools in my hometown of Bay City, Michigan. Coach Kayner was a legend in the local running community, having founded both the Bay Area Runners Club and the St. Patrick's Day Road Race. He also taught history and geography at my alma mater, Bay City Central High School, and I considered him a friend and mentor.

Throughout his 30-year tenure with the Bay City Public Schools, Al Kayner was a devoted and intelligent teacher who gave the full measure of his talents to help students in and out of the classroom. His enthusiasm, patience and attention to detail were tremendous assets in teaching geography and history and they were also his greatest gifts as a coach.

In the early 1970s, Al founded the Bay Area Runners Club, serving as the club's first president and then again he offered his services as its president in the early 1990s. Before that, Al coached track and cross country at both Bay City Western and Bay City Central high schools. He also coached long-distance running at Essexville Garber High School for a short time.

Al will perhaps be best remembered as the man behind the St. Patrick's Day Road Race, which he organized and led from the start. On March 17, 1974, Al ran the first race with 65 other runners who began at Veterans Memorial Park and finished at Wenonah Park. The race now begins in Essexville and finishes in downtown Bay City, but otherwise it's the same footrace that Al envisioned 28 years ago and it is still going strong.

When Al died last year of cancer, the loss was certainly felt most by his wife, Judy, their three children, Karen, Kristine and Steven, and the rest of his loving family. However, his passing was most assuredly also felt by the entire community. Al left his mark on all those he met. It is especially fitting to honor him with fireworks on the Fourth of July because Al's life on this earth was certainly a star-spangled event never to be forgotten.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Al Kayner, a coach, teacher and friend to all. I am confident that Al is somewhere right now lacing up his running shoes and preparing for a heavenly marathon with the other angels. Godspeed, Al.

TRIBUTE TO THE LABOR COUNCIL FOR LATIN AMERICAN ADVANCEMENT

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, which will be celebrating its 11th Annual Scholarship Awards Dinner on June 15, 2002 in Orion, Michigan.

As southeastern Michigan is home to a thriving Hispanic community, we have the opportunity to recognize the accomplishments and contributions of a fabulous organization dedicated toward ensuring the prosperity of Hispanic communities throughout the nation. Since its founding in 1973, the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement, or LCLAA, has served as a loyal voice for over 1.5 million Hispanic trade union members in the United States and Puerto Rico currently representing 43 international unions in 45 national chapters. The LCLAA's mission is to achieve social dignity, economic justice and higher living standards for every Hispanic worker. The LCLAA fulfills this mission by assisting young Hispanics in school by establishing educational support services, organizing recreational activities and mentoring students. Every year the LCLAA offers disadvantaged Hispanic students the opportunity for educational advancement by awarding college scholarships. This year the LCLAA's Oakland County, Michigan Chapter will give 17 students the opportunity to receive a college degree by awarding tuition scholarships. As a result of generous donations and the undying commitment of the LCLAA, these students will achieve a college education and enter fields like medicine, law, education, business, and many others.

Our great state of Michigan is home to thousands of Hispanic Americans, patriotic citizens who give so much to our country every day. With help from the LCLAA, Hispanic communities throughout the country continue to prosper and celebrate their great achievements. The spirit and enthusiasm of the LCLAA and the Hispanic community it represents is an invaluable asset to our great state and our great nation.

I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Labor Council for Latin American Advancement's Oakland County, Michigan Chapter, the student scholarship recipients and the entire Hispanic American community of Michigan on this wonderful day, and I salute them all for their years of tremendous contributions and support.

HONORING THE LIFE OF JOHN FRANCIS "JACK" BUCK

SPEECH OF

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who made a significant difference to many in the St. Louis region, Mr. John Francis "Jack" Buck.

Jack Buck was the voice of the Cardinals. He started calling games in 1954, and was the voice that I, along with millions of others throughout the Midwest, identify as St. Louis Baseball. We grew up listening to him and are deeply saddened by his death.

In addition to calling Cardinals games for almost 50 years, he also gained fame for his work on the CBS, NBC and ABC television networks and as the voice of the NFL on the CBS radio network. He called everything from pro bowling to Super Bowls and the World Series.

Buck was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame's broadcaster's wing in 1987, received the Pete Rozelle Award by the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1996, and received a lifetime achievement Emmy in 2000. He was a member of both the Broadcasters and the Radio Hall of Fame.

His sports-casting abilities were surpassed only by his community involvement. He happily gave his time to a variety of non-profit causes through the St. Louis area and was campaign chairman of the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. He was commended by the city of St. Louis for his service, and received the distinguished University of Missouri's Journalism Award for his outstanding achievements in broadcasting and citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, Jack Buck truly was an icon to the people of St. Louis. It is fitting that we pass this resolution honoring this great man. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.

MASS RAPES OF WOMEN AND GIRLS IN BURMA

HON. CYNTHIA A. MCKINNEY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I stand today to call attention to the appalling campaign of terror-through-rape recently uncovered in Burma. A report by the Shan Women's Action Network and Shan Human Rights Foundation reveals a truly horrific campaign of systematic rape carried out by the military against women and girls—some as young as five years old—in Burma's Shan State.

While Burma's record of repression is well known, this new report shines a light on atrocities previously hidden by the dark clouds of dictatorship. The report, based on interviews with girls and women refugees along the Thailand-Burma border, documents the rapes of 625 women and girls by Burmese military forces against villagers in Burma's Shan State. Given the alarming numbers in this limited refugee population, it is likely that this is but the tip of the iceberg. While the exact scale of this atrocity is unknown, there can be no doubt that Burma's military leaders are using rape on a wide scale as a weapon of war against its own civilian population.

According to the report, an astounding 83% of the documented rapes were committed by military officers from 52 different battalions, usually in front of their own troops. 61% of the cases were gang rapes, and many women were raped inside military bases. Many were held captive and raped repeatedly for months on end. Many women recounted the terror of being severely beaten, tortured, or mutilated. In 25% of the documented cases the women were murdered after being raped. The report also notes how those murdered by the Burmese military were left in public areas in order to intimidate and terrorize villagers and family members.

In this report, hundreds of courageous Burmese women and girls recount the terror of their experiences. One young Burmese woman told of how she found her five year old sister "tied up and crying, with her sexual organs bloody . . ." Another recounted how she and other women of her village "were forced to serve as sex slaves." Ironically, these new revelations of mass rapes come on the heels of the release of 1991 Nobel Peace Prize recipient Aung San Suu Kyi. But we harbor no illusions about the nature of this brutal military regime.

Mr. Speaker, whether they take place in Burma, Bosnia, or Eastern Congo, rape as a weapon of war is a grave violation of the Geneva Conventions and a crime against humanity. I call on the State Department, United Nations, and my colleagues in the Congress to speak out strongly against the military regime that continues to sanction and condone these rapes and other atrocities.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

HON. TODD TIAHRT

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, this morning I recited our Pledge of Allegiance with extra vigor, for our nation is under attack—not from terrorists but extremists in our own country. Yesterday the Ninth Federal Appeals Court in San Francisco ruled that the Pledge is an unconstitutional endorsement of religion and cannot be recited in schools—CANNOT BE RECITED IN SCHOOLS. I am sure you share my outrage. There is a reason that our Marines in Iwo Jima risked their lives to display the stars and stripes. Our flag stands for all that makes this nation great. From kindergarten on, our children are taught respect for our flag—a flag that represents this wonderful and, yes, Godly nation. Our children are taught that the United States represents liberty and justice for all. Our Declaration of Independence, Constitution and even our currency state our country's relationship to God. On September 11th, as soon as it was safe enough the first thing Members of Congress did was to gather on the steps of this magnificent building and sing "God Bless America." The judges in California are clearly out of touch, not only with the principles upon which the Pledge is based but also with the sentiment of the American people. For the past 9 months Americans have proudly displayed their love for their nation, as well as their faith in God. We realize now more than ever that our nation has a special charge and thus revere the Pledge more than ever. I am proud of our flag, I am proud of our nation and I will proudly recite "one nation, under God" for the rest of my life.

CHANGING THE CORPORATE CULTURE

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member commends to his colleagues the following editorial from the June 25, 2002, edition of the Lincoln Journal-Star entitled "Culture Change Is Needed in Corporate Crisis." The editorial suggests that changing America's business culture is the best long-term solution to the current crisis of business scandal after business scandal. These scandals have caused a distrust of corporate America and decimated investor confidence. Ethical CEO's are needed to change the dishonest precedent set by some business leaders. Corporate culture needs to revert back to decisions based on American values, rather than greed.

CULTURE CHANGE IS NEEDED IN CORPORATE CRISIS

The business pages of U.S. newspapers continue to read more like police blotters than the usual financial news. In fact, the average American may have simply given up trying to keep track of who has committed what wrongdoing.

The list of those indicted, arrested or resigning in disgrace is indeed far too long, suggesting that the post-Enron business world is in worse shape than feared. The result: a stock market in the tank, distrust of corporate America at an all-time high and employees turned out on the streets.

Naturally, the breadth and scale of the business scandals have prompted lots of discussion about reform. But what seems to be at the root of the unprecedented wave of abuses is something that can't be regulated: an out-of-control corporate culture that embraces the Dark Side.

As the current cases illustrate, dishonesty reigned in the boardrooms of many publicly held companies. The allegations include questionable accounting, insider trading and tax fraud. Everyone seemed in cahoots: CEOs, accountants, corporate attorneys, investment bankers, stock analysts and boards of directors. In the end, many corporate chieftains walked away from wrecked or tainted companies—scot free and millions of dollars richer.

But because accountability and ethics are so difficult to legislate and enforce, changing the business culture is perhaps the most enduring solution—although it is not necessarily easy or quick. That requires change from within. It requires, as Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill suggests, that ethical CEOs set the tone by denouncing the abusive practices. It requires the gatekeepers—the boards of directors, accountants, corporate lawyers and investment bankers—to vigorously uphold their fiduciary and moral responsibilities by providing oversight and leadership. Shareholders, too, need to take a more active role.

Some of the most potent reform efforts are coming from the business world. One money manager has put together a hefty group, including Warren Buffett, that intends to challenge companies in the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index on corporate-governance and executive-compensation issues. Among the requirements discussed by the New York Stock Exchange is that boards have a majority of independent directors, those without a business or family tie to the companies.

Whether it is pressure from prosecutors, the markets or shareholders, the current corporate culture, bred in the boom of the '90s, undoubtedly will have to change to salvage the shaky stock market. The question at hand is whether the transformation will be complete and long-lasting.

NATALIA R. HORAK: A DAZZLING STAR IN A BRIEF SHINING MOMENT

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring and remembering Natalia R. Horak, the 16-year-old daughter of Fritz and Lucy Horak of Bay City, Michigan. Tali died last year after suffering from bacterial meningitis, a disease that all too often takes the lives of our young people. Sadly, Tali's time on earth was cut short, but her life was beautifully spent in the few years she was among us. She has left an indelible mark on our community.

Tali loved her family and her many dear friends as fully and as ardently as she embraced life. Her zest for living, her enthusiasm and her exuberant personality captured the heart of all those fortunate enough to have fallen under her enchanting spell. A mere smile from Tali, something she did often, was enough to uplift and buoy the lowest of spirits. In fact, her teammates on the swim and golf teams constantly looked to her for encouragement and inspiration.

A graduate of Saint James Elementary School and Holy Family Middle School, Tali was a sophomore at Bay City Western High School. As a freshman, she was a varsity letter winner in swimming and golf. On the Saturday before she died, Tali swam her best time ever in the 100-yard butterfly and the 100-yard breaststroke at a Saginaw Valley Conference swim meet. She also was a superior student, an avid downhill skier and a wonderfully gifted young woman.

When Tali passed away, the loss for her parents, Fritz and Lucy, her brother, Frederick, her sister, Marisa, and the rest of her family certainly was unimaginably devastating. The hurt felt by her friends and teammates also must have seemed unbearable. The passage of time does not repair the holes in the hearts of Tali's friends and family. However, remembering Tali as she lived allows her bright light to shine for those fortunate enough to have experienced her love and friendship.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering the bright light that was Tali Horak. I have faith that Tali's star continues to shine brightly over us and that her exuberant spirit will always uplift and invigorate those who honor her memory. As we look up at the sky on the Fourth of July to watch the razzle and dazzle of the magnificent fireworks display in Tali's honor, let us recall her brief but radiant life and be thankful her beauty graced our lives.

HAPPY 40TH ANNIVERSARY, EDS

HON. PETE SESSIONS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, it is not often a $1,000 investment becomes a $21.5 billion powerhouse. But a modest investment is how Electronic Data Systems (EDS) started 40 years ago today.

EDS is a leading provider of information technology and business consulting services to businesses and governments worldwide. During its first 40 years, EDS changed the face of information-technology (IT) services while helping IT services grow into a global, half-trillion dollar market. For 40 years, EDS won its customers' trust through diligence and innovation.

American business could learn a lot from EDS' focus on long-term trust-building.

EDS had an unconventional operation when it opened for business on June 27, 1962. The company that would found the information-technology services industry didn't own any computers. So managers convinced a Dallas insurance company to rent EDS time on its idle computers at night.

With only 30 employees and a shoe-string budget, EDS relied on employees to sell data-processing services during the day and process that data at night. Everyone wore more than one hat and put in long days.

EDS' first contract was with Collins Radio in Iowa, and its next was a five-year agreement with Frito Lay to provide facilities management, a service in which EDS assumed responsibility for operating, maintaining, and upgrading companies' computers.

It was 1965 before EDS bought its first computer. By 1969, EDS owned 31 computers, employed 1,407 employees, and earned revenue of some $100 million.

Besides computers, the 1960s brought EDS new public-sector business that would ultimately transform the small company into an industry giant: Medicaid and Medicare, fundamental components of the Great Society. The late '60s found states struggling to implement these essential health-care programs for the elderly and the economically disadvantaged. The workload was overwhelming. EDS was prepared to help with proprietary systems and processing methods, many adapted from its previous transaction-processing work.

The many partnerships among EDS and states' Medicare and Medicaid programs flourished. By 1981, EDS processed Medicare claims in 16 states. The corporation now processes more than a billion health-care transactions—public and private—every year. That's one claim for every four Americans.

From its 1960s position as a modest Texas company that processed health-care insurance claims, EDS grew into a global corporation with 140,000 employees worldwide and more than 35,000 clients in more than 60 countries.

In EDS' early years, few understood how IT would change business. No one yet grasped how crucial information and access to it would become, not just for companies, but for the approaching global information culture.

From the beginning, EDS understood information's importance. That's why the company spent the last four decades ensuring the security of its clients' information and infrastructure technologies.

EDS has a rich history serving the federal government. In 1977, EDS signed its first major U.S. government contract with the National Flood Insurance Program. Some 25 years later, EDS continues that relationship.

In 1982, the U.S. Army awarded EDS Project Viable, the largest IT contract ever let by the U.S. Army at the time. The $650 million, 10-year contract called for EDS to build an information technology system for the Army to support its worldwide human resources activities. EDS' work on Project Viable not only launched the systems-integration market, but demonstrated EDS' ability to handle the largest and most complex IT projects on the planet.

Despite its focus on thorny information-technology projects for corporations, governments, and military organizations, EDS people know that IT has humane applications. In 1990, for example, EDS helped develop In Touch, which enabled veterans to find the families and friends of Americans who died during the Vietnam conflict—veterans' buddies, friends, confidantes, and commanders. EDS has replicated the In Touch system during the last 10 years for similar humanitarian applications.

Also in 1990, EDS collaborated with the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., to create Information Age, a hands-on exhibit that walked visitors through the decades to witness information technology's progress from ENIAC, the first electronic digital computer, to high-definition television.

In 2000—some 18 years later—EDS won the $6.9 billion Navy Marine Corps Intranet contract, the largest IT-services contract ever awarded by the U.S. Government. NMCI gives the Navy state-of-the-art information security while providing it the technology and bandwidth for business transformation.

EDS became a wholly owned subsidiary of General Motors in 1984. GM bought EDS to manage its global telecommunications network to link suppliers and dealers and thereby create the first large-scale electronic data interchange. The GM relationship gave EDS swift access to new markets, resulting in explosive growth. EDS zoomed from some 13,000 employees to more than 60,000 in just a few months.

EDS also helped prove the relationship between companies' IT investment and their productivity. Based on the performance of EDS' clients, many came to understand that efficient IT investment leads to more efficient business operations. It became clear that IT turns data into information and information into the kind of knowledge that drives growth.

By the 1990s, EDS was a global corporation with operations in some 30 countries. EDS designed and installed the official Results Reporting Information Systems for the 1992 Olympic Games in Spain, making it easier for fans and the press to get results faster. Also during the '90s, EDS won a $1.5 billion contract with the United Kingdom's Inland Revenue, and a similar contract with New Zealand's tax-gathering agency. The government of South Australia followed suit. Meanwhile, Rolls Royce contracted for EDS to do a full range of IT services, including infrastructure, network, systems, and applications. The Commonwealth Bank of Australia also became a major EDS client. In 1998, EDS technology helped more than 12 million Internet viewers watch the 1998 World Cup live.

As 1999 drew to a close, EDS worked with its global clients, and even non-customers, to ensure a flawless transition of myriad public and private IT systems to the Year 2000. EDS was so confident of its Y2K solutions that it opened the Millennium Management Centre to the press so everyone could witness what ended up as a flawless transition from December 31, 1999 to January 1, 2000.

On Super Bowl Sunday 2000, millions watched the Cat Herders, EDS' first Super Bowl commercial. It humorously explained what EDS does better than anyone else in the IT industry—help clients work better, smarter, faster, and cheaper.

EDS originated the idea of a Service Excellence Dashboard, a two-way interactive on-line tool EDS leaders and EDS clients can use to gauge and critique EDS' performance. The innovative dashboard and became a differentiator for EDS. It is continuously updated and improved based on client feedback. Others in the IT industry now use similar systems.

So, please join me in congratulating EDS on this auspicious occasion. At a time when "dot-coms" popped up and then, just as abruptly, disappeared, EDS continues to offer insight on how to be successful: Offer clients what they need, then provide even more.

Happy 40th anniversary, EDS.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JIM HOKIT

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it with great pride I take this opportunity to pay tribute to Jim Hokit. Jim has been a valued member of the Montrose community for over twenty years. During this time he has served his community as the manager of the Uncompahgre Valley Water Users Association. Through his leadership and hard work Jim has brought the Association into a golden age even paying off its outstanding debt forty-five years early. Now after 30 years with the company Jim is retiring from the association. I can think of no better way to celebrate Jim's retirement than to recognize his successful career and his contributions to our community.

Jim's position as manager of the Uncompahgre Valley Water Users Association is just one of the accomplishments that Jim has achieved. He has served on the Colorado Water Congress in every executive office, as chair of multiple committees and on the board of directors since 1981. Because of Jim's expertise and experience, he served as President of the Colorado Water Congress in 1994 through 1995. Jim is also a member of the Four States Irrigation Council and served as president in 1988. In recognition of Jim's tireless dedication to the Council he has received every award that the Council gives including the President's award. Jim is active in many organizations including the Colorado River Water Users Association and Club 20. Due to his passion for water issues, experience in the field and excellence, Governor Owens appointed Jim to the Colorado Water and Power Authority.

In addition to his service to the State of Colorado in water issues Jim is also involved in his community of Montrose. He has served as director of the Montrose Economic Development Council for nine years and director of the Montrose Chamber of Commerce for six years. Perhaps most importantly Jim is a loving husband to his wife Betty and a devoted father to his three children and grandfather of two.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honor to bring the life of a man like Jim Hokit to the attention of this body of Congress and this nation. Jim has gained the respect of his colleagues and fellow citizens and I am proud to represent him and his family. Jim's life is a testament to hard work and a passion and an example to us all. Thank you Jim for all that you have done to protect our precious resource of water and all that you have done for your community and enjoy your retirement.

A TRIBUTE TO THE FIGHTING MEN AND WOMEN OF CANADA AND AMERICA

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor all those American and Canadian soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines who have sacrificed their lives in military conflicts over the years, especially those killed in our joint struggle against the evils of terrorism in Afghanistan and throughout the world.

Throughout our mutual histories, America and Canada have enjoyed a special kinship and a great friendship. Our longstanding defense partnership with Canada traces back to World War II and remains well-entrenched and highly successful. Our commonality of interests and heritage often has resulted in significant collaboration in times of war as well as times of peace. America has no better friend than Canada and vice versa.

Americans and Canadians owe a debt of gratitude to those citizens of both nations who have donned their country's uniforms and gone off to war. The freedoms we enjoy in the United States and those enjoyed by our friends to the north remain intact in large measure because of the willingness of our brave men and women to stand up to tyranny and aggression wherever such acts have occurred. Today, we are faced with a new kind of war and again America and Canada have teamed up to vanquish those who would destroy our way of life. Together, we will win the fight and protect the freedom-loving people of our two peaceful countries.

Sadly, this new war has already taken its toll on America and Canada with the unimaginable loss of life that occurred in the vicious terrorist attacks at the World Trade Center in New York, on that doomed flight that crashed in rural Pennsylvania and at the Pentagon in Washington, D.C. Families in both our countries suffered losses in those tragedies and in the subsequent military actions in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to those patriots in Canada and the United States who willingly put life and limb on the line to protect and defend our liberties. A free society comes with a price and those brave Americans and Canadians who paid the ultimate price deserve a place of honor on the platform of freedom shared by our two individual nations.

STATEMENT ON FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S INITIATIVE TO EDUCATE PARENTS ABOUT INTERNET GAMBLING

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with our colleagues my statement regarding the Federal Trade Commission's recent announcement of an initiative to educate parents about children and Internet gambling. This Congress must make it a priority to pass Internet gambling legislation this year. Our children and families deserve nothing less than our best effort on this critically important issue.

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE FRANK R.
WOLF OF VIRGINIA

FTC INTERNET GAMBLING INITIATIVE
COMMERCE-JUSTICE-STATE APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE

Thank you all for being here today. I also want to thank and recognize the efforts of the others who will speak after me: Timothy Muris, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission; Dr. Rachel Vollberg, board member on the National Council on Problem Gambling, and Dr. Marianne Guschwan, chair of the American Psychiatric Association's Committee on Treatment Services for Addicted Patients.

Thank you all for appearing here today and for offering this public education initiative on an urgent issue facing this country's youth and families—the proliferation of Internet gambling.

As a member of Congress, I have been deeply concerned about the spread of gambling in this country. Perhaps no where has the proliferation been more explosive than in Internet gambling.

In 2000, Bear, Stearns & Co. Inc. reported that there were then at least 650 Internet gambling web sites, and that total revenues for 1999 had been $1.2 billion (an 80 percent increase from 1998) and would grow to $3 billion by this year, 2002. Others estimated that Internet gambling could soon easily become a $10 billion-a-year industry. Several new gambling sites appear on the web every day.

The negative consequences of online gambling can be as detrimental to the families and communities of addictive gamblers as if a bricks and mortar casino were built right next door.

Just as with traditional forms of gambling, online gambling can result in addiction, bankruptcy, divorce, crime, and suicide—the costs of which must ultimately be borne by society.

In its 1999 final report to Congress, the bipartisan National Gambling Impact Study Commission expressed alarm about the growing problem of youth gambling. The commission said, “Adolescent gamblers are more likely to become problem or pathological gamblers.”

Several studies also have shown the link between youth gambling and its association with alcohol and drug use, truancy, low grades and illegal activities to finance gambling.

As the gambling commission noted, youth gambling like youth smoking is often an issue of accessibility and marketing. There is perhaps nothing more accessible to children today than the Internet. The commission's report asked, “How do we as a nation quantify the values in lost opportunities to these young individuals?”

According to the gambling commission, gambling on the Internet is especially enticing to youth, pathological gamblers, and criminals.

But there are currently no mechanisms in place to prevent young people—who make up the largest percentage of Internet users—from using their parents' credit card numbers to register and set up accounts for use at Internet gambling sites.

The National Gambling Impact Study Commission recommended that a total prohibition of gambling on the Internet would provide law enforcement with the additional authority it needs to prosecute dishonest operators.

Internet gambling evades existing anti-gambling laws, endangers children in the home, promotes compulsive gambling among adults, preys on the poor, and facilitates fraud.

I could stay here all day cataloging story after story of ruined families, bankruptcies, suicides and official corruption which at their root you can find a history of gambling.

Gambling is a dangerous product. Study after study has shown that for many in our society, it is also strongly addictive. Gambling's proliferation over the Internet in the last few years illustrates just how pervasive and accessible it is to our youngest citizens.

I am hopeful that Congress will pass Internet gambling legislation this year. In the mean time, the FTC, the National Council on Problem Gambling, and the American Psychiatric Association have taken the lead in calling to the public's attention the risks of online gambling.

These organizations deserve public praise.

Internet gambling is particularly targeted to young people, and public education about the inherent dangers of online gambling is vital to helping parents protect their families.

IN HONOR OF SISTER PATRICK CURRAN

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the life and work of Mercy Sister Patrick Curran, who died peacefully on June 10, 2002. Sister Patrick was an inspiration and a friend to so many, and we were blessed to have her with us. Her entire life was an act of worship, and we will cherish her memory forever.

Sister Patrick's life embodied a Franciscan spirituality of compassion for and solidarity with the poor. Throughout her life, Sister Patrick devoted herself unconditionally to serving her sisters and brothers who were poor and elderly. She worked as a young nun in Harlem and East Los Angeles, in residential care facilities in Denver and St. Paul, and in elderly and homeless organizations in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Having spent 20 years with the Little Sisters of the Poor, including several years at St. Ann's home in San Francisco, Sister Patrick Curran transferred to the Sisters of Mercy in Burlingame in 1984. She spent 12 years as Vice President and Chief Operating Officer of the Mercy Retirement and Care Center in Oakland before accepting a position as Executive Director of the St. Anthony Foundation, a homeless service and advocacy agency in the Tenderloin of San Francisco.

St. Anthony Foundation is best known for its Free Dining Room that serves an average of 2,000 meals each day. It also has a dozen other programs that serve homeless and low-income people. Her leadership guided St. Anthony Foundation through important times in its history and development. She distinguished herself by her ability to bring together very talented people—staff, volunteers and donors—to provide quality service to St. Anthony's guests. She was steadfast in her efforts and once remarked, “You can't give up hope. I see poverty but I see more hope. At St. Anthony's we have hundreds of young people coming to work. The young people are a sign of hope for the future.”

Her work in the Bay Area and around the nation was recognized in 2000 when Archbishop William Levada presented her with the Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice Cross, an award bestowed by the Pope on lay persons and clergy who have given exceptional service to the Church. In 2001, she received an honorary degree from the University of San Francisco School of Nursing for her years of service to the sick and aging.

It is with great personal sadness and recognition of their loss that I extend my deepest sympathy to her mother Bridget Curran, her entire family, and to her religious community, the Sisters of Mercy of Burlingame. To all who loved Sister Patrick, thank you for sharing her with us and for giving her so much happiness. I am proud to join my constituents in thanking and praising Sister Patrick for her dedication to the elderly and poor of California and of this Nation.

TRIBUTE TO MITCH KEHETIAN,
LIFETIME ACHIEVEMENT
AWARD, METRO DETROIT SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL JOURNALISTS

I applaud Mitch Kehetian and the Metro Detroit Society of Professional Journalists for their leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting them for their exemplary years of leadership and service.

A TRIBUTE TO CHAPTER 571 OF
THE VIETNAM VETERANS OF AMERICA ON THE OCCASION OF THE DEDICATION OF THEIR MEMORIAL AND MUSEUM

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity on Memorial Day 2002 to attend an extremely moving and inspirational event in my congressional district.

On that day, in the small town of Hermansville in Michigan's Upper Peninsula, members of Chapter 571 of the Vietnam Veterans of America dedicated the Thomas St.

Onge Vietnam Veterans Museum and Memorial.

Creating this museum and memorial has been a project based on love, dedication and pride. You might even say, Mr. Speaker, that this museum is a structure built literally on donations, because the land for the museum itself was donated by local residents Richard and Anne Lungerhausen, and planning was done in the clubhouse, a structure donated by Wells Fargo.

I said this was a project based on love. Tommy St. Onge was killed in 1969 in the bitter fighting in the A Shau valley, a battle for control of the northern highlands of South Vietnam. Tommy's death was one of many tragedies recounted in the book Hamburger Hill by Samuel Zaffiri. Although he died more than three decades ago, Tommy is remembered with love by his peers. Love and fellowship permeate this project, Mr. Speaker. The dedication ceremony booklet quotes Major Michael O'Donnell, himself a Vietnam casualty, who wrote lines that are so well known to Vietnam veterans, "Be not ashamed to say you loved them, though you may or may not have always. Take what they have left and what they have taught you with their dying and keep it with your own."

This museum does just that, Mr. Speaker. It takes those things "they have left," as Major O'Donnell said—including artifacts as large as a Bell U-H1 "Huey" helicopter and an M-60 Main Battle Tank—and it uses them to teach new generations.

And what does this museum teach about the Vietnam War, and the men and women who served and died there? The 34 members of Chapter 571 have this to say about the mission and goal of their museum and memorial: "Our wish is for all people to remember them as they were, forever young, husbands, sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, and friends. We hope to educate the public, especially those who were too young to understand what this war was all about."

History has yet to truly judge this war, Mr. Speaker, but we know there are lessons to be learned right now. The single greatest lesson we can teach our children is that it was not for lack of dedication, faith, patriotism, comradeship or discipline on the part of the American soldier, sailor or airman that South Vietnam ultimately fell to the North Vietnamese army. Our fighting men and women, who were sometimes savagely and terribly treated by opponents of the war at home, went to Vietnam in answer to the call to duty. There they suffered grievous wounds, the loss of comrades, and sometimes the loss of faith and idealism, but they answered the call to duty! In the history of America's wars, here has been no higher honor gained, nor greater sacrifice made, than that of the veterans of our war in Vietnam!

In the small town of Hermansville in Michigan's Upper Peninsula, the members of Chapter 571 of the Vietnam Veterans of America and their families and other club members have worked since 1996, donating thousands of hours and thousands of their own dollars in pursuit of the dream of celebrating this honor and sacrifice. Their dream is not complete, Mr. Speaker. Jerry Ayotte, the chapter's president, described for me the concept of a museum that will one day have a rotunda with four wings to include personal mementos and military memorabilia from World War I, World War II, and the Korean War.

I encourage you and all our colleagues to visit this museum, Mr. Speaker. It's located at N 16462 Linden Street, and, until a regular staff can be hired, it's open only on Sunday afternoons, when two volunteers are available. Hermansville is a small town, but it was small towns like this across America that supplied our heroes in Vietnam, and that continue to support our military with their taxes and—the greatest sacrifice—with their own sons and daughters.

When you are there, you can meet and thank—as I have had a chance to meet and thank—the members of Chapter 571 for their efforts to keep alive both the memories of fallen comrades and the conviction that these comrades did not fall in vain, because they offered their lives in the belief that they fought for America's greatest ideals of freedom.

Vietnam Veterans of America Chapter 571 and their spouses are: Richard Adams and his wife Ann, Peter and Karen Anderla, Ronald and Debbie Augustine, Gerald and Patti Ayotte, Calvin and Cindy Baird, Roger Clark, Edward J. Donahue, Darryl D. and Gretchen Fossen, William N. Isetts, Robert and Cathy Laroche, Bernard E. and Brenda Loukkala, Russell Peters, Dale I. and Sharon Peterson, Dennis C. and Beth Peterson, Edwin L. Plettner, Gary F. Poupore, Terrance L. Richer, Wayne J. and Linda Rochon, Lyle R. and Jo Schoen, Norman J. Schreiner, Louis R. Schuette, Roger L. and Priscilla Schuette, Peter Tanguay, Ronald D. and Susie Tomasi, Roger J. and Randy Treves, Terrence W. and Rosemary Trudell, Donald J. Trulock, Thomas R. and Sally Unger, Paul C. Vinzant, James R. and Rebecca Wash, James E. Watson, Edwin R. Whytsell, Edward A. and Maryanne Zahn, and Ronald E. Zahn.

HONORING THE LIFE OF JOHN FRANCIS "JACK" BUCK

SPEECH OF

HON. TIMOTHY V. JOHNSON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 26, 2002

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, today it is my pleasure to join my colleagues in honoring a truly great American, Jack Buck. For nearly five decades, Jack Buck's memorable voice announced Super Bowls, World Series and the games of his beloved St. Louis Cardinals. I was honored to actually be in the broadcast booth at Busch Stadium with him on a few occasions. Growing up in Central Illinois, Jack Buck became baseball to me. His voice was that of a trusted friend's and he became like a member of my family. I distinctly remember his calls of Stan Musial, Bob Gibson, Ozzie Smith and Mark McGwire and I will never forget game five of the 1985 National League Championship Series. Ozzie Smith had hit a home run to beat the Los Angeles Dodgers and a very excited and emotional Jack Buck told everyone to, "Go crazy, folks, go crazy". This man, this legend, came from nothing to become everything he wanted to be. He is a shining example of what is good and right and what can be achieved in our country. Tradition and the integrity of baseball are words that come to my mind when I think of this pillar of his community. He did so much for St. Louis and those of us in the Midwest fortunate enough to have KMOX on our dials. My thoughts and prayers are for the Buck family and the fans of Jack Buck and the St. Louis Cardinals organization in this time of mourning.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO PATTY ERJAVEC

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to Patty A. Erjavec for her outstanding contributions to the business community of Pueblo County, Colorado. Patty was recently awarded the Charles W. Crews Business Leader of the Year Award by the Greater Pueblo Chamber of Commerce in recognition of her selfless leadership within the business community, leadership that deserves the appreciation and respect of all Coloradans.

Patty Erjavec believes strongly in the importance of an educated workforce to bring about economic revitalization in the Pueblo area. As President of the El Pueblo Boys' & Girls' Ranch, she has worked tirelessly to insure that future generations have the access to a solid education that they deserve. At the ranch, Patty has invested herself in the lives of many children, showing them the love and compassion which has helped to form them into productive members of the Pueblo community.

Patty has been active in numerous other civic organizations, each expressing her vision for a brighter and more prosperous future for the business community of Pueblo. During her presidency of the Pueblo Rotary Club #43, she actively organized the membership to provide tutoring, mentoring and parenting classes to an underprivileged elementary school with a significant number of families living well below the poverty level. As a member of the State Board for Community Colleges and Occupational Education, Patty has been able to influence statewide policies in order to support the development of an educated workforce.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute to Patty Erjavec for her contributions to the Pueblo community. I applaud her receipt of the Greater Pueblo Chamber of Commerce's "Business Leader of the Year" award recognizing her significant achievements for the good of the community. Patty serves as a shining example that a woman can successfully manage career goals and family responsibilities while making time to give back to her community. For these reasons I bring Patty Erjavec to the attention of this body of Congress and applaud her devotion to the people of Pueblo.

HONORING DONALD AND RUTH
McNULTY ON THEIR 50TH WED-DING ANNIVERSARY

HON. JACK QUINN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor the 50th wedding anniversary of Donald and Ruth McNulty of Blasdell, New York. As family and friends will gather to celebrate this joyous occasion, I too would like to recognize them at this special time. Following their hearts throughout this 50-year journey has led to happiness and a loving life together.

Love has flourished between these two hearts, but not without dedication and hard work. This celebration of 50 years is a remarkable accomplishment and is to be commended. Mr. Speaker, it is with excitement and admiration that I extend my congratulations to Donald and Ruth and offer them my best wishes for many years to come.

JON LOCKE: SADDLING UP FOR THE OLD WEST

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Jon Locke, a journeyman actor whose feature-length films and television credits read like a viewer's guide to the great Westerns so many of us enjoyed during our youth. Cowboy actors such as Jon Locke not only entertained us, they also helped unlock the history of the real West by giving viewers a glimpse of the legendary men and women who settled our American frontier.

Over the years, many fans saddled up and rode along with Jon Locke and scores of other cowboy actors as they journeyed back to the Old West by watching celluloid versions of our frontier legends. While the names of all these actors may not be as recognizable as some of the top-billed stars who rode off into the sunset, the supporting cast of faithful sidekicks, bad guys, cowpokes, gunfighters and others were unmistakable and essential to the Western myths that have become such an important part of our American culture.

Fans will recognize Jon for his appearances in episodes of "Gunsmoke," "The Texan," "Cimarron City," "Bonanza," "The Virginian," "Wagon Train," "Laramie," "Tales of Wells Fargo," "Sheriff of Cochise," and "Custer," to name a few, and also for his roles in feature films for MGM, Universal Studios, 20th Century Fox and Walt Disney Productions. He also appeared in "Land of the Lost," "The Waltons," "Perry Mason" and many other classic television shows of bygone days, some of which now can be seen in syndication.

As a characteristically American film genre, Westerns occupy an honored place in the hearts and minds of all of us who see honor and glory in the rugged individualism portrayed in those movies. Jon Locke has been an integral part of the history of the Western in movies and on television throughout his acting career. Still active in the film industry, Jon also does his part to keep the memory and spirit of the Old West alive by appearing at reenactment events and Western festivals throughout the country. He usually brings his banjo along and has been known to sing a tune or two.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in applauding Jon Locke for embodying in his acting the true grit, valor and work ethic of the cowboys, frontiersmen and pioneers who forged ahead to make America the great and noble nation it is today. I am confident that Jon won't hang up his spurs until the last roundup is over. He truly has kept the campfire burning for all those aspiring young cowboys and cowgirls of the future.

CONGRATULATING A.M. ROSEN-THAL IN RECEIVING THE PRESI-DENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, last week, President Bush announced the recipients of the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor. A.M. Rosenthal, a Pulitzer Prize winner, former executive editor of the New York Times, and human rights advocate was named as one of the prominent Americans to receive the Presidential Medal of Freedom.

Mr. Rosenthal led the fight against tyranny, against communism and he provided a valuable voice in raising America's attention to the problem people from a variety of faiths being horribly persecuted simply for their religious beliefs.

Mr. Rosenthal should serve as an inspiration to the future American generations that one can change the world by passionately seeking truth and justice.

Congratulations Mr. Rosenthal on winning this prestigious and honorable award.

I want to enclose for the record this article from the Washington Times that describes in more detail the contributions of Mr. Rosenthal and the other recipients of this elite honor.

{From the Washington Times, Friday, June 21, 2002}

12 RECEIVE PRESIDENTIAL MEDALS—MANDELA, NANCY REAGAN, ROSENTHAL, MR. ROGERS HONORED

(By Joseph Curl)

President Bush yesterday announced the recipients of the Presidential Medal of Freedom, a list that includes two writers, three entertainers, an athlete and a former first lady.

Among the dozen to receive the nation's highest civilian honor is A.M. Rosenthal, a Pulitzer Prize winner for foreign correspondence who became the executive director of the New York Times. He writes a weekly column now for the Washington Times.

"Believe me, it never occurred to me that I would be given a medal by the president—or anyone else," Mr. Rosenthal said in a telephone interview last night. The White House praised Mr. Rosenthal's efforts "to highlight the suffering of oppressed people, especially religious minorities."

Mr. Rosenthal began in newspapers in the 1940s traveled the world as a foreign correspondent. In 1960, won the Pulitzer Prize for his reporting from Poland. He served a stint in India before returning to New York to become the top editor at the New York Times. The other recipients, all of whom will receive their medals in a White House ceremony in July, are:

Nancy Reagan, wife of former President Ronald Reagan, for her long anti-drug work as first lady and her continued work against drug and alcohol abuse through the Nancy Reagan Foundation.

Nelson Mandela, who led the fight to end apartheid in South Africa over the course of his 73-year public life. Mr. Mandela was imprisoned by the South African government in 1962 and was released on Feb. 11, 1990. Mr. Mandela was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1993 and inaugurated as the first democratically elected president of South Africa on May 10, 1994.

Katharine Graham, who led The Washington Post until 1993 and, the White House said, "was known as an editor who maintained excellence by supporting her reporters and encouraging those who worked for her." She was chairman of the Post, but actually never held an editing position.

Hank Aaron, who holds the career records for home runs, at 755. Mr. Aaron, who was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1982, played first on a team in the old Negro League and, the White House said, "was unfettered in his pursuit of excellence by frequent encounters with racism throughout his career."

Bill Cosby, a one-time stand-up comedian and one of the most popular television performers of the 1980s with "The Cosby Show," which revolutionized the portrayal of blacks on television. "Throughout his career," the White House said, "Dr. Cosby has appealed to the common humanity of his audience, rather than the differences that might divide it."

Plácido Domingo, a renowned opera singer, conductor and arts administrator over his 44-year career. "He was blessed with an unusually flexible voice, which has allowed him to perform in 188 different roles, more than any other tenor in the annals of opera performance," the White House said.

Fred Rogers, host of "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" for over three decades, making the show the longest-running program in the history of public broadcasting. "All of his work has been emblematic of the same philosophy and goal: to encourage the healthy emotional growth of children and their families," the White House said.

Peter Drucker, a prominent pioneer of management theory. "Dr. Drucker has championed concepts such as privatization, management by objective and decentralization" and is "currently applying his expertise to the management of faith-based organizations," the White House said.

Dr. D.A. Henderson, best known for his leadership of the World Health Organization's global small-pox-eradication campaign from 1966 to 1977. "He was also instrumental in initiating the WHO's global program of immunization which now vaccinates approximately 80 percent of the world's children against six major diseases," the White House said.

Irving Kristol, author, editor and professor. "Mr. Kristol's writings helped lay the intellectual groundwork for the renaissance of conservative ideas in the last half of the 20th century. His approach adapted traditional conservative thought with contemporary societal issues and became the framework for compassionate conservatism," the White House said.

Gordon Moore, co-founder of the Intel Corporation who directed the company's growth as the most successful development of the microchip. In November 2000, Mr. Moore and his wife established the Gordon and Betty Moore Foundation with a multibillion-dollar contribution, funding projects in higher education, scientific research, the environment and San Francisco Bay Area projects.

The Presidential Medal of Freedom was established by President Truman in 1945 to recognize civilians for their service during World War II, and it was reinstated by President Kennedy in 1963 to honor distinguished service. It is the nation's highest civilian award.

CELEBRATING SAN FRANCISCO LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL AND TRANSGENDER PRIDE AND IN HONOR OF OFFICER JON D. COOK

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender pride in San Francisco and to pay tribute to the memory of Jon D. Cook, the first openly-gay San Francisco police officer to lose his life in the line of duty.

This weekend marks the 32nd annual San Francisco Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Pride Celebration entitled, "Be Yourself, Change the World!" This is our time to celebrate San Francisco's proud history of advocacy for equal rights for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons and to recognize the important contributions the LGBT Community makes to our City and to our nation.

Officer Jon Cook's legacy is an important example of such contributions. On June 12, 2002, Officer Cook was killed when his police car collided with another police car as they both pursued a suspected violent felon. Before joining the force, he worked as a research scientist searching for a cure and treatments for HIV/AIDS. He also served honorably as a lieutenant in US Air Force intelligence with a top-level security clearance.

Officer Cook touched the lives of many people in San Francisco. More than 2,000 attended his funeral mass, including friends and family members, over 600 fellow officers from throughout Northern California, and hundreds of residents and community leaders from the Castro and Mission districts that he served. His fellow policemen and women remember him as a dedicated officer who always wanted to be at the scene; residents remember with gratitude the way he looked out for them. "Jon loved being a cop," recalled his domestic partner of three years, Jared Strawderman. "He loved serving his community. He loved being in situations where he could help people. He wanted to go to where the trouble was and fix the problem."

To his parents Jon Sr. and Rosemary Cook; his siblings Bonnie, Brian, Wayne, Jamie and Gary; partner Jared Strawderman; and his many nieces and nephews; we share your loss, and we are grateful for the service Jon provided to the people of San Francisco.

The contributions of Officer Cook and so many others in San Francisco bring into sharp focus the need for basic protections of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons. As we mourn the loss of Jon Cook, we also reaffirm our commitment to the fight for equal rights for all and our belief in the beauty of our diversity.

TRIBUTE TO JERRY L. BLOCKER, LIFETIME ACHIEVEMENT AWARD WINNER, METRO DETROIT SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL JOURNALISTS

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to a man whose leadership and achievements in broadcast television and journalism span the decades and have touched the lives of so many across southeastern Michigan and beyond. Each year the Metro Detroit Society of Professional Journalists holds its annual banquet, a celebration honoring local journalists and the recent work they have accomplished. This banquet, traditionally the biggest Society of Professional Journalists event of the year, also honors distinguished journalists who have shown outstanding dedication to journalism and whose contributions continue to leave a lasting impression on all those in the field, with the prestigious Lifetime Achievement Award. This year, on June 26, 2002, the Metro Detroit Society of Professional Journalists honored three local journalists with Lifetime Achievement Awards, and among them they honored Jerry L. Blocker posthumously, who died on October 31 at age 70.

A pioneer for African American journalists in Detroit, Jerry Blocker was truly a model and a mentor for so many television journalists. Hired by Channel 4 after the 1967 Detroit riots, his work paved the way for so many young African Americans with aspirations for television journalism. He anchored weekend newscasts until 1975, and following a long and prosperous career, he retired from broadcast work in the early 1990s and established his own public relations firm, Jerry Blocker Enterprises, in Farmington Hills. Known for his characteristic low-key and matter-of-fact style, he devoted his life and profession to providing the highest standards of journalistic excellence.

Jerry Blocker always gave one hundred percent in every aspect of his life; his work, his community, his family and his friends. Those who had the pleasure of knowing him and the benefit of working with him will surely continue to remember him as a dedicated, faithful friend to all. He will truly be missed.

I applaud Jerry Blocker and the Metro Detroit Society of Professional Journalists for their leadership, commitment, and service, and

I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting them for their exemplary years of leadership and service.

COMMEMORATING THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF EDS

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago, June 27, 1962, an industry was born with the investment of just $1,000. That industry today is nearly half a trillion dollar market and provides jobs to more than 20 million people around the world.

With the founding of EDS, Electronic Data Systems, that day, the world started doing business in a different way as information technology services became part of the global economy. Today, information technology is pervasive. Whether we're using an ATM, making airline reservations, or renewing a driver's license, we are all surrounded by computing power that fundamentally affects how we live.

Plano, Texas-based EDS started small with just a few employees using the excess capacity of other company's computers. Today, EDS has 140,000 employees serving government and business in 60 countries with revenue of $21.5 billion.

There have been many milestones along EDS's journey.

In the 1960s, EDS developed the first comprehensive system for managing public health care programs. Today, EDS processes 2.4 billion medical claims transactions a year.

In 1976, EDS started processing airline tickets sold by travel agents. EDS is now the largest provider of IT services to the airline industry.

EDS launched the systems-integration market in 1982 with the U.S. Army's Project VIA-BLE, a vast and complex human-resources system. At that time, it was the largest IT-services contract ever let by the U.S. Army.

In the 1990s, the United Kingdom's Inland Revenue Service selected EDS to become its IT services provider.

Today, EDS is building a vast intranet for the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps under the largest IT contract ever awarded by the U.S. government. The value is $6.9 billion.

EDS has long made significant contributions to its communities. Its award-winning JASON Project brings the thrill of discovery to hundreds of thousands of school children each year. The company also provides grants to elementary school teachers so they can bring the latest technology to the classroom. And each fall thousands of EDS employees go out into the community to lend a helping hand as part of Global Volunteer Day.

EDS is entering its fifth decade doing what it does best—managing and integrating information technology services. It is committed to building trust with each client and to making available to all clients sophisticated information security and business-continuity services.

Well-deployed information technology has fueled significant productivity gains in the last 40 years—particularly in the last decade.

These gains are especially valuable today in an interconnected, global, digital economy. EDS is a big part of those gains.

The information-technology industry holds unprecedented opportunity. Everyone wants to be part of it. Many companies are realizing what EDS understood 40 years ago—that even the most groundbreaking technologies quickly lose their edge unless they are creatively and innovatively applied.

Some may think the forty-year milestone may mean middle age is approaching. Not in EDS's case. It is a company as focused on delivering value to its clients today as it was in 1962. It stays young by reinventing itself and listening to its clients.

Mr. President, please join me in saluting EDS for its many contributions to the information technology services industry and in wishing the company well for another 40 years.

2002 SNICKERS REGION I CHAMPIONSHIP

HON. JACK QUINN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome the 2002 Region I SNICKERS Championship to the Western New York area. The SNICKERS® Region I Championships are the most important United States Youth Soccer registered team competition conducted by the Region, or by any State Association within each State Association each year. As such, this competition requires that each State Association and all members of State Associations support the Championships as their first priority.

The 2002 SNICKERS Region I Championships will be held Friday, June 28th through Tuesday, July 2nd. I would like to extend congratulations to all teams, parents, referees and administration who will be participating in the 2002 SNICKERS Region I Championships. This most prestigious event will be a measure of accomplishment they will always cherish and remember.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend all of the participants in the 2002 Region I SNICKERS Championship for their focus on the young athletes of America's future. It is the goal of not only preparing the athletes for competition but to promote positive contributions towards an equally important world of physical fitness—with learning at the heart of all of our activities.

AMERICAN CITIZENS TAKEN AGAINST THEIR WILL TO SAUDI ARABIA

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I commend to our colleagues' attention an editorial from yesterday's Wall Street Journal that highlights the many cases of American women who have been forcibly taken to Saudi Arabia. Even though they are U.S. citizens, once taken to Saudi Arabia, they have not been allowed to leave.

I hope the 107th Congress and this Administration will put a stop to this practice and receive assurances from the Saudi Government that it will not happen again.

[The Wall Street Journal; Review and Outlook]

ALL THE PRESIDENT'S WOMEN

White House spokesman Ari Fleischer should stop referring to grown women as children. The women in question are Amjad Radwan and Alia and Aisha Gheshtayan, three American citizens in Saudi Arabia whose fate has finally become an issue for Congress.

When reporters at a White House press briefing recently deluged Mr. Fleischer with questions about whether President Bush had raised their plight during an Oval Office chat with the visiting Saudi Foreign Minister, he repeatedly—eight times by our count—invoked the word “custody” or “custody of a child” to characterize how the “President views this.”

It's true that a number of American mothers have had an awful time getting children out of Saudi Arabia, though even here it beggars belief to reduce these to custody disputes. But two of the three cases that the House Government Reform Committee aired during its hearings did not involve children.

Amjad Radwan is 19 years old and, unlike her older brother, cannot leave Saudi Arabia because she is a woman and must have the permission of her Saudi father, who refuses to give it. In highly charged testimony delivered via videotape, Amjad's mom, Monica Stowers, told the House she remains in Saudi Arabia because she fears for her daughter's life; Miss Stowers further reported that both her son and daughter were raped by members of her former husband's family. Alia and Aisha Gheshtayan are also adults.

When pressed on this point, the State Department says it has made every effort to ascertain the women's wishes about returning to America. In the case of Miss Roush's daughters, however, State concedes that it hasn't seen them since the mid-1990s. Moreover, its own human-rights report on Saudi Arabia declares that “physical spousal abuse and violence against women” is “common” and that the Saudi government tends to look the other way. Translation: The only way these Americans are going to be able to speak freely, without fear of returning home to a beating, is to insist that Riyadh give them the exit visas that will allow them to come here.

The truth is that there isn't soul at State or the Saudi Foreign Ministry who doesn't understand that if President Bush were to express his displeasure to Crown Prince Abdullah, then Alia, Aisha and Amjad would be on the next plane for New York. And things would never have reached this dismal stage if the State Department hadn't signaled from the start that it was willing to let all the ground rules be set by Saudi law and custom—even in defiance of U.S. courts, arrest warrants and rights.

Last June, 23 Senators, including leaders Trent Lott and Tom Daschle, signed a letter urging Secretary of State Colin Powell “in the strongest possible terms, to intervene forcefully and in person with the Saudi authorities at the highest levels to secure the prompt release and repatriation of Alia and Aisha Gheshtayan.” The immediate answer was the standard State kiss-off: a letter explaining that the women were "subject to Saudi law."

But it seems that Congressional interest can have a catalyzing effect on Foggy Bottom. At hearings last Tuesday before the House International Relations Committee, William Burns, Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern Affairs, disclosed that Mr. Powell has now raised the issue with the Saudi Foreign Minister and that he himself brought it up with Crown Prince Abdullah 10 days earlier, on the eve of the Government Reform Committee's hearings.

But Mr. Burns continued to define the issue as a custody dispute. And his remarks suggest that State still refuses to treat this as a state-to-state issue, in favor of a touchy-feely approach about "keeping families connected." This is a long way from "Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead"—Teddy Roosevelt's tart reaction when a Berber bandit chief took an American hostage in Tangier.

In a TV spot running under the title "Al-lies Against Terrorism," the Saudi government urges Americans to "listen to America's leaders" when it comes to the "facts" about the country that spawned 15 of the 19 September 11 hijackers. It features President Bush vouching for how the Saudis have been "nothing but cooperative." This is their chance to prove it.

HONOR OF MABEL BROWN SCHINE

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay a final tribute to the magnificent life of Mabel Schine. Mabel passed away recently in San Francisco after a lifetime of community service and leadership. We are very grateful for her distinguished career and her inspirational life, and we will miss her greatly.

As a dietary expert at San Francisco's Mount Zion Hospital, Mary's Help Hospital, and the Jewish Home for the Aged and as the City's first African American District Health Director, Mabel demonstrated her remarkable talents as a dietician and as an expert advisor during her thirty-year career.

Her service to the City of San Francisco included work for the Economic Opportunity Council and Model Cities Program and on the Citizen's Advisory Committee for Mayor Feinstein's Office of Community Development. She served as Treasurer of the San Francisco Black Leadership Forum and was actively involved in San Francisco politics.

Following her retirement, she continued to serve her community at Bayview Hunter's Point Senior Health Day Care Center, Bayview Hunter's Point Boy and Girls Club, and as President of the San Francisco Sickle Cell Disease Foundation. Her service also extended to Contra Costa County where she led non-profit boards, ran government commissions, and tirelessly and eloquently advocated on behalf of the black community.

To her husband Lloyd Schine, her daughter Marvin Jean and her son Lloyd Jr., her sisters, her grandchildren and her many dear friends, thank you for sharing Mabel with our City and our community. I hope it is a comfort to you that so many people share your grief and honor her memory.

TRIBUTE TO PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE DAY AND THE FILIPINO AMERICAN COMMUNITY COUNCIL

HON. DAVID E. BONOIR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. BONOIR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the Filipino American community of Michigan, who celebrated the Philippine Independence Day on June 22, 2002.

On July 4 of 1946 the Philippines gained its independence. Since that glorious day, the nation has endured many hardships but has continued to persevere. The Philippines and its proud citizens are entering into a new era of political, social, and cultural growth. They possess a focused vision of their future and will do all they feel is necessary to ensure prosperity.

The relationship between the United States and the Philippines is strong and growing stronger. Today, the United States is enriched by the many Philippine Americans who have made this country their home. As the second largest Asian group in the United States, Philippine Americans are making their mark, serving as hard working members of the civic, business, and professional communities. They have made major contributions to nearly every facet of American society.

As Michigan is home to a thriving Filipino American community, we have the opportunity to recognize the accomplishments and contributions of a fabulous people. The Filipino American Community Council's KALAYAAN 2002 Picnic and Pistahan attests to the wealth of the culture we have developed here in Michigan. With food, music, cultural performances and dances, the spirit and enthusiasm of the Philippine American community of Southeastern Michigan is very strong. The Philippine American community truly adds to the wonderfully diverse American culture by sharing with us their customs, traditions and beliefs. They have been such an invaluable asset to our great state.

Mr. Speaker, I join the people of the Philippines, those of Filipino ancestry around the world and Filipino Americans in Michigan celebrating Independence Day. I salute all of them for the tremendous contributions to freedom and human dignity which they have made.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO GEORGE CURRIER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who has spent the last six years in the dedicated service of his community of Collbran: George Currier. George is a great Coloradan who has given of himself countless times during his term on the Collbran Board of Trustees. His knowledge and love for the community, as well as his vision for the future, have made him an invaluable resource to the whole town.

George Currier was born and raised in his beloved Collbran. His family was in the ranching business during his childhood; and while they would leave town every winter to ranch their cows in the Appleton area, George and his family would return with the nice weather: Collbran is George's home.

During George's time on the Board of Trustees he has overseen numerous improvements to the community, including the construction of a new town hall. But more important than the physical development that has been undertaken during his watch, George values the many Collbran town employees with which he has worked closely during his six years of service. However, George's efforts to better his beloved hometown have not been limited to his service in town government: George, his wife Nancy and their three children remain active in the Collbran community.

Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I bring to the attention of the body of Congress the accomplishments of a man whose love for his hometown, and whose desire to improve his community, is an inspiration to his friends and neighbors alike. A public servant in the truest sense of the phrase, George Currier's time on the Collbran Board of Trustees has been a fine example to all of us who serve our nation in elective office. With appreciation, I echo the praise George has received from his friends and neighbors in Collbran and salute him for his six fine years of service to his community.

HONORING UPS EMPLOYEE ALLEN "CHUCK" BITTNER

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. GARY MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, Chuck Bittner started with UPS back in 1966 as a Package Car Driver delivering mail to the businesses and residents of the Inland Empire in Southern California. After 25 years of safe driving, drivers are inducted in UPS' Circle of Honor, which is the highest honor awarded to Package Car Drivers. Chuck not only achieved that illustrious accolade but was also recently honored for a staggering 30 years of safe driving by his Center Manager. With 30 years behind the wheel and not a single traffic mishap, Chuck has truly accomplished something special. The people of Southern California owe Chuck, and other delivery drivers like him a debt of gratitude for keeping our roads safe. Despite this impeccable driving record, Chuck says he will probably retire in the next year. He will certainly be missed as he and his truck have become a familiar and reassuring sight in the Southern California neighborhoods.

IN HONOR OF THE LIFE OF HARVEY LEGGETT, SR.

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of the life of an honorable, respected, and valuable member of the Ypsilanti community, Reverend Harvey Leggett, Sr. Rev. Leggett, who passed away Monday, was a man of wisdom and a man of God, and served his community with distinction. He will be dearly missed.

Reverend Leggett guided the St. John's Missionary Baptist Church in Ypsilanti for 32 years. His style moved the members of the church. So commanding, in fact, was his delivery and presence that he was nicknamed "sergeant." He was not only masterful on the pulpit, but also was an accomplished writer and singer, who employed a good sense of humor.

"Sergeant" Leggett's dedicated service was not limited to Ypsilanti, but included serving in leadership positions in national African American Baptist conventions. In so doing, his work touched the lives of many across this great land, and his memory will be broadly remembered.

Rev. Leggett is survived by his wife of 42 years, Bernice, as well as sons Steve, Willie, and Harvey Jr., and daughter Angela. They are in the thoughts and prayers of many in the Ypsilanti community, and I would ask that they also be in ours. Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues to join me in extending our condolences to the Leggett family, and to honor the life of a great man and community leader, Harvey Leggett Sr.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JAN NOWAK-JEZIORANSKI

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the most respected leaders of America's Polish community, Jan Nowak-Jezioranski. As he prepares to return to Poland, I would like to take this opportunity to bid him farewell and thank him for his decades of service in this country as a remarkable civil servant and defender of freedom and democracy.

Both the United States and Europe are greatly indebted to Mr. Nowak-Jezioranski. In World War II, he was an acclaimed "Courier from Warsaw" who served as a liaison between the Home Army in the occupied Polish territory and the Polish government in exile in London and representatives of the British government. In addition, he was a key witness that spoke out against the atrocities of the Nazi occupants in Central and Eastern Europe. Near the end of the Cold War, Jan Nowak-Jezioranski was the director of the Polish section of Radio Free Europe. In this capacity, he gave millions of his countrymen the strength and courage to not give up hope behind the Iron Curtain. As a U.S. Citizen, Jan Nowak-Jezioranski bolstered my colleagues and my efforts to contain the Soviet block. Due to his leadership, he was able to help opposition groups in Central and Eastern Europe flourish.

Jan Nowak-Jezioranski's vision helped Poland become one of our closest allies in Europe. Following the historic changes, he helped the American public realize the importance of supporting Poland's struggling democracy both economically and politically. Mr. Nowak-Jezioranski recognized the need to abolish the political, social and economic divisions in Europe and therefore, he diligently supported NATO expansion. As a member of the Alliance, Poland has proven a creditable source during the Kosovo campaign and the war on terrorism.

Mr. Nowak-Jezioranski has been a long time supporter of the transatlantic community and promoter of democratic values. I believe that our nations will maintain their commitment to strengthening the transatlantic community and encouragement of democratic ideals. It is my hope that from across the Atlantic, Mr. Jan Nowak-Jezioranski will remain active in the public debate on issues that are key to our nations' futures. I ask my colleagues to join me in expressing immense gratitude for Mr. Jan Nowak-Jezioranski's numerous contributions to the cause of democracy and freedom,

SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAM PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Social Security Program and Protection Act. This legislation is a protective measure that would maintain the integrity of Social Security Programs.

H.R. 4070 would protect the nearly 7 million Social Security and SSI beneficiaries who cannot manage their own finances and have a "representative payee." This legislation prevents misuse of benefits by: (1) authorizing the reissuance of certain misused benefits, (2) disqualifying from serving as representatives payees fugitive felons and those who have been convicted and imprisoned more than a year, and (3) expanding civil monetary penalties to include representative payees misuse of benefits.

In addition, this legislation would also further protect Social Security by Clarifying that civil monetary penalties can be imposed for failure to notify SSA of changed circumstances that affect eligibility or benefit amount.

H.R. 4070 includes provisions that aim to support meaningful work opportunities for individuals with disabilities. The bill would ensure that employers who hire individuals with disabilities through referral by an employer network qualify for the Work Opportunity Tax Credit.

Now is the time to save Social Security. We must ensure the viability and integrity of Social Security for the sake of our nation's most deserving citizens. Half of all American workers do not have employer-provided retirement programs and must rely on Social Security and their own savings.

If we do not protect Social Security, there will be serious poverty among the elderly. Women are particularly vulnerable because they have lower income retirement than men and are likely to live in poverty. Couple this reality with the vulnerability of those recipients who cannot manage their own financial affairs and the need to safeguard social security becomes even more evident.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my Colleagues to support this legislation. Social Security is one of the most critical issues facing Congress today. This legislation recognizes the importance of Social Security to the long-term economic stability of Americans.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MID-COLUMBIA VETERANS MEMORIAL IN THE DALLES, OREGON

HON. GREG WALDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues the pride I feel as an American and as a native of The Dalles, Oregon in the establishment of the Mid-Columbia Veterans Memorial, which I will join the community leaders of The Dalles in dedicating on the 4th of July. On this hallowed day, as we observe the founding of the greatest nation in the history of mankind, it is fitting that we honor the patriots who have fought and died to keep it so.

This memorial was conceived by the citizens of The Dalles to pay tribute to the sons and daughters of Oregon's Mid-Columbia region who served our nation in times of war. Building on an existing memorial to local veterans of the Vietnam War, leaders of this community launched an effort to create a lasting monument to every veteran of the Mid-Columbia who has served the United States in uniform. Built from funds gathered from the State of Oregon, the federal government, local businesses and private citizens, the memorial we will unveil arose from the hearts of the men and women of the Mid-Columbia who remain forever grateful for the sacrifices that purchased the freedom they so deeply cherish. I am proud to have assisted in securing federal funds for this worthy project, just as I am proud to have hailed from a community whose ground has been so fertile in producing patriotic citizens.

Mr. Speaker, no memorial to our nation's veterans seeks to glorify armed conflict or celebrate the tragedy that war represents. Rather, they are erected to pay homage to the virtue that is found among men and women for whom the triumph of despotism and tyranny is more terrifying even than their own deaths.

Mr. Speaker, the philosopher John Stuart Mill once wrote, "War is an ugly thing, but not the ugliest of things. The decayed and degraded state of moral and patriotic feeling which thinks that nothing is worth war is much worse. A man who has nothing for which he is willing to fight, nothing he cares about more than his personal safety, is a miserable creature who has no chance of being free unless made and kept so by the exertions of better men than himself."

It is only by God's grace that our nation has been blessed with such men and women, whose exertions have safeguarded the freedom not only of this nation, but of much of the rest of the free world. Men like Charles R. Rubart of The Dalles, who was killed in action in 1899 while serving in the Philippines, far from the beauty of his native land. Men like Loren Kaufman, a son of The Dalles who received the Congressional Medal of Honor for gallantry in action during the Korean War. Men like Stan Adams, another Korean War veteran who also received our nation's highest award for leading the men under his command on a bayonet charge against an enemy force 10 times the size of his own unit. These are Oregonians whose exertions have earned them an eternal place in the pantheon of America's greatest heroes.

Mr. Speaker, in the years ahead, as generations not yet born pass by this site, they will see a memorial as sturdy and as enduring as the valor of the heroes it was erected to honor. And as they do so, they will be reminded of the sacrifices of the men and women whose glory is enshrined in this elegant and powerful memorial. To the community of The Dalles, Oregon, I offer my most sincere gratitude for the contribution they have made in recognizing the service of the veterans of the Mid-Columbia.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

HON. ROGER F. WICKER

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the chairman and the ranking member for producing this bipartisan legislation which will support our troops, modernize our military, and ensure that we are prepared to win the war on terrorism. I support this legislation, but feel it is appropriate that I discuss one unfunded issue that is vitally important to the future of our military. The President's Budget appropriately requests continued funding of the LHD-8 Amphibious Assault Ship. Unfortunately, this bill did not fund the requested $243 million necessary to continue procurement of this ship.

Our Navy's LHA-1 class "Big Deck" Amphibious Assault Ships are at the end of their service life. Navy studies indicate a requirement for twelve Big Deck Amphibious Assault Ships and must procure replacements for the older ships to sustain this requirement. The past four fiscal years, Congress has recognized this need by providing over $1 billion for advanced procurement, detail design, and construction of a new LHD-1 class ship. Congress authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract for the construction and early delivery of this ship, the LHD-8, providing that it "shall be funded on an incremental basis."

The LHD-8 is being procured under a fixed price construction contract, entered into by the government and the shipbuilder in good faith based on the assumption that annual government funding increments would always stay ahead of the expenditure curve. This would allow the parties to plan and execute design and construction without concern for interference resulting from funding shortfalls. The loss of FY03 funding would violate the precepts of good faith contracting, which is essential for many defense procurement programs.

Mr. Chairman, failure to appropriate the $243 million requested by the President would cause several negative repercussions, including severe economic impacts in my state of Mississippi. The potential for the Navy to issue a "stop-work" order on this project due to funding uncertainty could cause a job loss in the shipbuilding industry alone of over 1,500 jobs. If funding were delayed even one year, delivery of this military asset would be pushed back from FY07 to FY08, causing an additional cost to the taxpayers of approximately $129 million.

It is my hope that throughout the consideration of the bill, the Chairman and Committee can provide the resources necessary to keep this project on the contracted schedule.

HONORING RUBEN VALDEZ

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Ruben Valdez for his leadership and service to Colorado.

Cesar Chavez once said, "We cannot seek achievement for ourselves and forget about progress and prosperity for our community. Our ambitions must be broad enough to include the aspirations and needs of others, for their sake and our own." Even a cursory glance at Ruben Valdez's life illuminates why he has been named to the Cesar Chavez Leadership Hall of Fame. The hall of fame recognizes Colorado Latinos for their outstanding contributions to civic life. Ruben's contributions to Colorado, the Hispanic community and public life have been extraordinary.

Ruben was elected to the Colorado House of Representatives in 1971. A few short years later he was elected Speaker of the House making him the first Hispanic to ever serve in that position. After retiring from the House in 1978, President Jimmy Carter appointed him to be the Regional Director for the United States Department of Transportation. The following year, he was selected by Colorado Governor Dick Lamm to serve as Executive Director of the Colorado Department of Social Services. In 1985, Ruben accepted an unprecedented dual appointment by Governor Lamm to be Executive Director for both the Colorado Department of Social Services and the Colorado Department of Labor and Employment.

At the end of this extraordinary period in his public life, Ruben was perhaps the most successful Latino leader in Colorado history. For many young Latinos interested in politics and government at the time (some on whom now serve on my staff) Ruben Valdez was a pioneer—living proof that having a Spanish surname did not disqualify a person from having a successful career in public service.

Cesar Chavez was a leader who organized the Hispanic community from "outside" the halls of power in government. Ruben showed that another leadership model was available to Hispanics. Ruben showed that Hispanics could also work from inside the corridors of power, not only in the halls of government, but in corporate boardrooms. I think Cesar Chavez would have been pleased by Ruben's success, particularly because it paved the way for so many other talented Hispanic leaders to come.

Today Ruben Valdez is a very successful consultant helping clients at every level of government. He was a well-known figure in the halls of the Colorado State Legislature when I served there, and I came to admire him for his reputation as a respected lobbyist.

Ruben Valdez is a thoughtful and experienced leader. Those who know him will tell you that he is the kind of man you want on your side in a difficult battle. His service to Colorado has been exceptional, and I am pleased to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring his achievements.

A SALUTE TO JOE CRISCUOLO FOR HIS LEGACY OF SERVICE

HON. CYNTHIA A. MCKINNEY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the outstanding record of public service of Joe Criscuolo, a noted social activist of the Atlanta area community and personal friend. Our community is deeply saddened by his unfortunate and recent demise.

A man of humble beginnings, Joe Criscuolo, 84, grew up in New York during the Great Depression as a first generation Italian-American. The hardships endured by the Criscuolo family generated Joe's great sense of concern and sensitivity for issues of the working class. Mr. Criscuolo's youthful concerns would later evolve into a grand scale record of service and activism on behalf of marginalized groups spanning the course of his lifetime.

Joe's high level of involvement in reform movements was matched by his wife Mrs. Goldy Criscuolo's equal zeal and service for progressive causes. Well into their senior years when most of their peers were enjoying retirement and the fruits of years of labor, they stood firmly together against the grain. Wherever people were oppressed, Joe and Goldy Criscuolo supplied infinite hours of service with no regard for gender, race, sexual orientation, religion, or any other social characteristic. Louder than any vitriolic words or opposing groups, Joe's actions spoke volumes to the value of service. I have personally drawn strength and inspiration to wage unpopular fights from Mr. Criscuolo's unwavering altruism for people in need.

A few of Mr. Criscuolo's momentous battles were the campaign to reform the Italian education system, the fight for the Equal Rights Amendment, and the movement against discrimination based on sexual orientation in the Dade County School System.

Additionally, Joe Criscuolo and his wife were active members of the Atlanta Chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW); the Martin Luther King, Jr. March Committee; the Grady Coalition; the Atlanta chapter of ACT-UP (the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power); and the coalition to change the state flag among others. Joe recently worked to support Hate Crimes legislation, to prohibit predatory lending, and to ensure affordable public transportation for poor and working people.

Mr. Criscuolo leaves to cherish his memory a devoted wife Mrs. Goldy Criscuolo; one son, Jim M. Criscuolo; a daughter-in-law, Candace Criscuolo; three grandchildren; two siblings; and a host of relatives, friends and other individuals whose lives have been touched in a positive way.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Joe Criscuolo's exemplary record of service, which is a model for us all. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Joe Criscuolo for his endurance, passion and will to go against the grain.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, July 8, 2002

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Lord God of history, our celebration of Independence Day this year took on new meaning. Marked by the wounds this Nation suffered as a result of terrorism on September 11, this Nation is stronger in its resolve to seek, protect, and assure the free exercise of independent government set up by the people for the people governed.

The memory of that tragic day has made our enjoyment of freedom in this Nation an even greater treasure which must now be preserved on the face of the Earth for generations to come.

Grasped by the spirit expressed by the original signers of the Declaration of Independence, may the Members of the 107th Congress and the citizens of this Nation again appeal to You as the supreme judge of the world for the rectitude of all our intentions.

With firm reliance on the protection of divine providence, may we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor to foster and defend equal justice and the freedom of all now and forever. Amen.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG INDUSTRY'S NEW LOBBYING TECHNIQUE

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the prescription drug industry has come up with a new lobbying technique. Three weeks ago, the drug industry dumped almost $3 million into a Republican fundraising event. Two weeks ago, in a party-line vote, the drug industry and Republicans pushed through a prescription drug Medicare privatization bill.

Now the drug industry is pressuring medical schools and teaching hospitals and doctors to write Congress urging us to continue permitting drug companies to engage in anticompetitive behavior. They have convinced a few of these health care providers that unless the U.S. lets the drug industry keep competition out of the market, my colleagues guessed it, research and development will dry up. Fourteen years of patent-protection monopoly prices apparently is not enough.

The same industry that consistently earns profits five points higher than other profitable industries argues that if they do not exploit America's seniors they cannot and will not do research and development. That excuse, Mr. Speaker, is wearing thin.

Private and public resources for health care are not infinite. Drug companies continue to cheat American consumers, employer-sponsored health care plans and State governments and every other health care purchaser out of billions of dollars each year. Enough is enough.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 5 p.m. today.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

COMPREHENSIVE STUDY OF THE RATHDRUM PRAIRIE/SPOKANE VALLEY AQUIFER

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4609) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a comprehensive study of the Rathdrum Prairie/Spokane Valley Aquifer, located in Idaho and Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4609

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COMPREHENSIVE STUDY OF THE RATHDRUM PRAIRIE/SPOKANE VALLEY AQUIFER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the State of Idaho and the State of Washington, shall conduct a comprehensive study of the Rathdrum Prairie/Spokane Valley Aquifer for the purpose of preparing a model of the aquifer and establishing for those States a mutually acceptable understanding of the aquifer as a ground water resource.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings and conclusions of the study by not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For conducting the study under this section there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary $3,500,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 4609, the Rathdrum Prairie/Spokane Valley Aquifer Study Act of 2002, directs the Secretary of the Department of Interior to work with the State of Idaho and the State of Washington to conduct a comprehensive study for the Rathdrum Prairie/Spokane Valley Aquifer by preparing a groundwater model to help establish a mutually acceptable understanding of the aquifer as a groundwater resource. The tools developed by this legislation will help to better coordinate and understand the various factors that influence the quantity and quality of the aquifer and encourage better cooperation between the two States charged with its maintenance operations.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Washington (Mr. NETHERCUTT), the sponsor of this legislation, for his work on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. NETHERCUTT).

Mr. NETHERCUTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and I am pleased to make a statement in support of this bill.

There is nothing in the Northwest States that is more precious than our air and our water. We in eastern Washington and northern Idaho are blessed with not only these great resources but especially our clean water. We think it is some of the best water in the entire world to drink. So we want to make sure that it is protected, and that is what this bill does.

This bill was introduced by me and by the gentleman from northern Idaho (Mr. OTTER) because we are affected by this bill, and the aquifer which traverses both States affects our respective districts. So we are proud to introduce this bill which calls for a study, as the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) mentioned, to analyze this aquifer, to understand what is there so we can make sure we protect it and wisely manage it. One of the great challenges for us in the Pacific Northwest is to make sure that our abundant resources, our natural resources, our mountains, our streams, our rivers, our lakes, our entire environment is well managed by Federal agencies and by private resources.

So in the case of the aquifer we have a situation where there are some economic interests that want to use it. They want to use it as a resource to provide industrial benefit to eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

But before they do so, we have to be sure that it is protected. What this bill does is to take a hard look at doing a model and a study to make sure we know what is there so that it can be protected.

There is also a disparity in consideration of aquifer use, of economic development, on either side of the border. Spokane, Washington, is my hometown, the major city in my district, the largest population center. It is about 32 miles from the Idaho border.

Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, rests on the other side of the border in Idaho that is represented by the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER), and the States of Idaho and Washington have very different consideration times for permitting, for permitting for economic benefit and use.

In Idaho, if we want to get a permit, it can take months; in Washington, it can take years. So we think that in doing this study and having the Committee on Resources in Congress adopt this position in a study, we can make sure that there is some continuity of interest in analysis and development that would rest on each side of the border, so that the legislatures of each side, each State, each respective State, would have a chance to look at this issue and understand what is there, and then make policy decisions that are coordinated rather than disparate.

So I can say to the House that there is unanimity on the part of our chambers of commerce that this is a wise approach. There are five chambers of commerce that are in Idaho and Washington State that are affected by this issue, and they are of the opinion and their memberships are of the opinion that this is a wise thing to do; that is, make sure we know what is in the aquifer, what its considerations and characteristics are, so that we can make sure we manage it wisely.

I especially want to thank the Committee on Resources. The gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) and his subcommittee presented this bill in very fast consideration, very fair consideration. The entire Committee on Resources passed it out. I especially am grateful to that Committee on Resources that took into account this very important measure that affects a large area in eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

I will restate again that the environmental protections that we seek from this bill are sensible, they are reasonable, and they are timely. It is estimated that there are millions of gallons that go through this aquifer and would be presented by it, but we have to be sure that we know what is there, and we have to be sure that what is there is wisely managed so that we protect this wonderful resource that we have in the Pacific Northwest, a clean environment, a great place to live and work, a great place to have economic development, at the same time we protect our environmental resources.

So I will thank the gentleman from Nebraska and his counterpart, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU), for his courtesy in allowing me to say a few words in support of my bill. I speak on behalf of the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) in thanking the committee and subcommittee of jurisdiction for considering this measure, and we hope it will pass overwhelmingly.

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4609 directs the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study of groundwater resources in certain areas of Washington and Idaho. In the Pacific Northwest, our water resources are precious resources, and we expect the results of the study to provide the States with reliable information they can use to better manage the groundwater resource which is shared between the States.

I commend my colleagues, the gentlemen from Idaho and Washington, for bringing this legislation to the floor, and urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4609.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOLBE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4609.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

ISSUING PERMITS FOR NATURAL GAS PIPELINES IN GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3380) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue right-of-way permits for natural gas pipelines within the boundary of Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3380

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PERMITS FOR EXISTING NATURAL GAS PIPELINES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior may issue right-of-way permits for natural gas pipelines that exist as of September 1, 2001, within the boundary of Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

(b) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—A permit issued under subsection (a) shall be—

(1) issued consistent with laws and regulations generally applicable to utility rights-of-way within units of the National Park System; and

(2) subject to any terms and conditions that the Secretary deems necessary.

SEC. 2. PERMITS FOR PROPOSED NATURAL GAS PIPELINES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior may issue right-of-way permits for natural gas pipelines within the boundary of Great Smoky Mountains National Park that are proposed to be constructed across the following:

(1) The Foothills Parkway.

(2) The Foothills Parkway Spur between Pigeon Forge and Gatlinburg.

(3) The Gatlinburg Bypass.

(b) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—A permit issued under subsection (a) shall be—

(1) issued consistent with laws and regulations generally applicable to utility rights-of-way within units of the National Park System; and

(2) subject to any terms and conditions that the Secretary deems necessary, including—

(A) provisions for the protection and restoration of park resources that are disturbed by pipeline construction; and

(B) assurances that construction and operation of the pipeline will not adversely affect Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3380 was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JENKINS) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue right-of-way permits for a natural gas pipeline to tie in an existing pipeline within the boundary of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

In 2000, the Sevier County Utility District in rural east Tennessee made the request of the National Park Service to grant authority to tie in a natural gas pipeline to an already existing underground natural gas pipeline along U.S. Highway 441 in the Gatlinburg-Pigeon Forge spur. The existing pipeline was installed prior to the Park Service's acquisition of the right-of-way along the highway.

After preparing to grant the request, it was discovered that while the Secretary possesses the authority to grant right-of-way permits through the units of the park system for various utility services, the Secretary did not possess the authority to grant a permit for natural gas and petroleum product pipelines.

The pipeline would service homes in Gatlinburg, Tennessee. At the present time, these homes are reliant upon propane and electricity to meet their energy needs. Given some air quality issues at Great Smoky Mountains National Park, the Park Service believes it is in the best interests of the park to permit natural gas pipelines as a clean alternative for new homes and businesses.

No permits will be granted until all environmental and safety reviews have been conducted. This authority would be consistent with the authority granted at the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkway park units.

This is a noncontroversial bill supported by both the majority and the minority, as well as the administration, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JENKINS), the sponsor of this bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the subcommittee and the committee in their favorable consideration of this bill, and in recommending it for passage.

The gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) has explained the provisions of this bill very well, and he pointed out that in planning this project, that it was discovered that the Secretary of the Interior had power to issue permits for other utilities, but not for natural gas, and that power has been given to the Secretary of the Interior on a case-by-case basis in the case of other national parks across this land.

All of these lines will be laid underground. The lines will be all under a road, and there will be no diminution in the natural beauty of this great national park.

As we know, this is the most visited national park in the country. There is substantial growth on all sides of this national park, in all of the border areas. The passage of this legislation will allow that growth to be clean growth. The Senate has passed this legislation, and we will appreciate the favorable consideration in the House of Representatives.

□ 1715

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3380 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue right-of-way permits for an existing natural gas pipeline as well as future natural gas pipelines that would cross or parallel three road segments that lead into the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

We must be very careful in approving such activities. When the Subcommittee on National Parks, Recreation, and Public Lands held a hearing on H.R. 3380 earlier this year, the National Park Service testified in support of the legislation, noting that the pipelines would cross or parallel only park roads and not involve other park resources. The National Park Service also assured the committee that all necessary steps would be taken to ensure that these pipelines have no negative impact on park resources or visitor use.

Given those assurances and relying upon them, we have no objection to consideration of H.R. 3380 by the House today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOLBE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. OSBORNE) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3380.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FORT CLATSOP NATIONAL MEMORIAL EXPANSION ACT OF 2002

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2643) to authorize the acquisition of additional lands for inclusion in the Fort Clatsop National Memorial in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2643

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Fort Clatsop National Memorial Expansion Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Fort Clatsop National Memorial is the only unit of the National Park System solely dedicated to the Lewis and Clark Expedition.

(2) In 1805, the members of the Lewis and Clark Expedition built Fort Clatsop at the mouth of the Columbia River near Astoria, Oregon, and they spent 106 days at the fort waiting for the end of winter and preparing for their journey home.

(3) In 1958, Congress enacted Public Law 85-435 authorizing the establishment of Fort Clatsop National Memorial for the purpose of commemorating the culmination, and the winter encampment, of the Lewis and Clark Expedition following its successful crossing of the North American continent.

(4) The 1995 General Management Plan for Fort Clatsop National Memorial, prepared with input from the local community, recommends the expansion of the memorial to include the trail used by expedition members to access the Pacific Ocean from the fort and the shore and forest lands surrounding the fort and trail to protect their natural settings.

(5) Expansion of Fort Clatsop National Memorial requires Federal legislation because the size of the memorial is currently limited by statute to 130 acres.

(6) Congressional action to allow for the expansion of Fort Clatsop National Memorial to include the trail to the Pacific Ocean would be timely and appropriate before the start of the bicentennial celebration of the Lewis and Clark Expedition planned to take place during the years 2004 through 2006.

SEC. 3. EXPANSION OF FORT CLATSOP NATIONAL MEMORIAL, OREGON.

(a) REVISED BOUNDARIES.—Section 2 of Public Law 85-435 (16 U.S.C. 450mm-1) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a) INITIAL DESIGNATION OF LANDS.—" before "The Secretary";

(2) by striking "coast:" and all that follows through the end of the sentence and inserting "coast."; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(b) AUTHORIZED EXPANSION.—The Fort Clatsop National Memorial shall also include the lands depicted on the map entitled 'Fort Clatsop Boundary Map', numbered '405-80026C-CCO', and dated June 1996.

"(c) MAXIMUM DESIGNATED AREA.—The total area designated as the Fort Clatsop National Memorial shall not exceed 1,500 acres."

(b) AUTHORIZED ACQUISITION METHODS.—Section 3 of Public Law 85-435 (16 U.S.C. 450mm-2) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a) ACQUISITION METHODS.—" before "Within"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) LIMITATION.—The lands (other than corporately owned timberlands) depicted on the map referred to in section 2(b) may be acquired by the Secretary of the Interior only by donation or purchase from willing sellers."

(c) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—Section 4 of Public Law 85-435 (16 U.S.C. 450mm-3) is amended—

(1) by striking "Establishment" and all that follows through "its establishment," and inserting "(a) ADMINISTRATION.—"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(b) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—If the owner of corporately owned timberlands depicted on the map referred to in section 2(b) agrees to enter into a sale of such lands as a result of actual condemnation proceedings or in lieu of condemnation proceedings, the Secretary of the Interior shall enter into a memorandum of understanding with the owner regarding the manner in which such lands will be managed after acquisition by the United States."

SEC. 4. STUDY OF STATION CAMP SITE AND OTHER AREAS FOR POSSIBLE INCLUSION IN NATIONAL MEMORIAL.

The Secretary of the Interior shall conduct a study of the area near McGowan, Washington, where the Lewis and Clark Expedition first camped after reaching the Pacific Ocean and known as the "Station Camp" site, as well as the Megler Rest Area and Fort Canby State Park, to determine the suitability, feasibility, and national significance of these sites for inclusion in the National Park System. The study shall be conducted in accordance with section 8 of Public Law 91-383 (16 U.S.C. 1a-5).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2643, as amended, would allow for the expansion of Fort Clatsop National Memorial, the only unit of the National Park System solely dedicated to the Lewis and Clark expedition. It commemorates the camp where the Corps of Discovery spent the winter of 1805 to 1806. As we approach the bicentennial of this monumental expedition, our Nation continues to draw inspiration from this great journey across the American West.

The expedition, led by Captains Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, gave birth to new interest in the American frontier as they provided the first detailed information about the Northwest that ultimately led to a steady procession of settlers into the region. These explorers made their trek following President Thomas Jefferson's orders to explore the Missouri River to its source, establish the most direct route to the Pacific Ocean, and to make scientific and geographic observations.

They were also instructed to learn about the Indian tribes they would meet along the way and attempt to impress them with the strength of the United States and to report back regarding their observation. After their great journey across the continent, the members of the Corps of Discovery spent the winter of 1805-1806 at Fort Clatsop before beginning their return trip back east.

This legislation would also authorize the National Park Service to study the suitability and feasibility of three sites in the State of Washington, all of which have significance to the expedition, for the possible inclusion as units of the National Park System. This expansion, supported by all property owners within the boundaries, would help prepare for the influx of visitors expected during the upcoming bicentennial. We commend all parties who have worked together on this legislation to address some issues of concern that came up during committee consideration.

This is a good bill that is supported by the administration as well as both the majority and the minority, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as the sponsor of H.R. 2643, the Fort Clatsop National Memorial Expansion Act. I am joined by my colleague, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD), who is an original cosponsor of the bill.

It has taken a lot of hands to bring this bill to the floor today and I would like to thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) and the ranking member, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL) of the Committee on Resources, and from the Subcommittee on National Parks, Recreation, and Public Lands, the gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH) and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands (Mrs. CHRISTENSEN).

Closer to home, I would also like to thank Willamette Industries for its cooperation in making this bill possible and Willamette Industries' successor in interest, Weyerhaeuser. Without the cooperation of these two Northwest businesses and their employees and executives, we would not be here today with a successful bill.

And even closer to home, I would very much like to recognize the hard work and diligence of Cameron Johnson on our staff who has worked on this bill since his first day as a staffer on Capitol Hill. And I would also like to recognize his predecessor Bill Minor, who unfortunately has gone to the University of Washington for law school. But Bill is from Astoria, Oregon, and Fort Clatsop is literally in his back yard.

Fort Clatsop is the western terminus of the Lewis and Clark expedition. This bill authorizes expansion of its boundaries from 130 acres to 1,500 acres. The expansion would permit the national memorial to reach the ocean and to accommodate the expected 1 million visitors for the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition. These million-plus visitors will see a nearly exact replica of the fort in which Lewis and Clark wintered over in 1805 on the Oregon coast. They will see a forest that is approximately the same as what Lewis and Clark saw. Our trees are currently about that size because of timber harvests about 75 or 100 years ago. And historians think that Lewis and Clark saw a similar forest because of a great earthquake which occurred approximately 100 years before they reached the Oregon coast. Visitors will also undoubtedly enjoy a decent dose of Oregon rain.

The Lewis and Clark expedition spent 106 days at Fort Clatsop over the winter of 1805-1806. Out of those 106 days, there were 6 sunny days, 6 cloudy but rainfree days and 94 days during which the expedition enjoyed what we would call in Oregon liquid sunshine and in the rest of the country it would be called rain.

Also this expansion will permit visitors to access the Pacific Ocean. This was, after all, the western terminus of the epochal Lewis and Clark expedition.

It serves us well to remember that like so many other scientific and exploratory adventurers, the discoveries and achievements which were made by this expedition were made through great adversity and frequently while they were looking for something else.

The expedition started planning when the territory was under French and Spanish sovereignty. By the time the expedition actually left, President Jefferson had purchased much of the territory from Napoleon. President Jefferson envisioned part of the expedition's goal to be creating a series of trade alliances with a string of Indian nations along the trail. History proved otherwise. Both the Indian nations and the United States had other pressing priorities.

And, finally, the expedition was to search for a waterway to the great West, the great hope of the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries, a hope which floundered on ignorance of geography and geology, in this case the intervening Rocky Mountains. But Lewis and Clark was an epochal achievement and a success, despite the zigs and the zags and the partial planning successes.

Meriwether Lewis grew up near here in Ivy, Virginia, about as near to this spot in the city of Washington as Fort

Clatsop is to my home in Oregon. Lewis and Clark and the expedition walked, paddled boats, rode horses and crossed more than 6,000 miles over a longer than 28-month period, and when they were through, they asserted America's claim as a transcontinental Nation and made another bold stroke in removing the words "I can't" from the American lexicon.

As important amongst the achievement of Lewis and Clark is in history, so are the vision and the values; the vision of America as a vibrant, growing Nation; the values of courage and perseverance. These endure with us today in our time of trial, trial from abroad by those who hate and who hate especially our diversity and our liberty; trial from within by those who abuse the freedom and trust that America has bestowed.

This is a bill to expand Fort Clatsop, and at its bicentennial it is appropriate to commemorate and celebrate, but we also do well to remember, not for history's sake alone, but to remember that we have continued to walk in the footsteps of Lewis and Clark on a journey of discovery, and to remember that beyond any horizon the future cannot be known with certainty. But with vision and values, courage and persistence, we will continue in the tradition of Lewis and Clark at Fort Clatsop, and we shall meet our destiny well.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD).

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Oregon (Mr. WU) for working to ensure that Southwest Washington will play a role in the Lewis and Clark commemoration through this legislation. I also want to thank the chair and the ranking member of the committee, and particularly the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) for his strong support of this bill and for his strong support of the National Park System in general.

The bicentennial commemoration of Lewis and Clark's expedition is just a year away. They began their journey back in 1803. And in 2003 communities across our Nation will begin commemorating the Corps of Discovery and the promises they back with their journey.

It is my hope that during this commemoration Americans will visit important stops along the journey of discovery, including Station Camp and Fort Canby along with Fort Clatsop. On November 18 in 1805, William Clark stopped at Station Camp, sometimes referred to as Megler's Rest, stopped and proclaimed, "I am in full view now of the ocean." It is hard to imagine what that must have felt like for the Corps, having traveled clear across the country in lands no American had seen before. But there in Washington State that is what he said and that is what they saw.

It was also at this historic site that they took a critical vote, 100 years before suffrage, 60 years before the Emancipation Proclamation. The Corps of Discovery voted where they would spend the winter. In that vote they included Sacagawea, and York, who was Clark's black slave, 100 years before suffrage and 60 years before emancipation, the entire Corps voted on the critical matter of where they would winter at my good friend's district at Fort Clatsop.

Today I welcome the opportunity to express my strong support for this legislation which seeks to expand Fort Clatsop National Monument, the only unit in the National Park system that is solely dedicated to the amazing journey of Lewis and Clark. And of great importance to my district is the legislation's inclusion of study language to authorize study for the inclusion of Station Camp and Fort Canby within the Fort Clatsop National Memorial. Although Station Camp is considered the end of the voyage, it is also true that the Northwestern part of the journey included what is now Fort Canby where Lewis and Clark led a small team to the actual coast. And you can only imagine what it must have been like to stand there on what is now called Cape Disappointment, look out over the ocean, and hoping that a ship would be there to take you home, but seeing none, you realize that you would spend the winter in that wonderful but also cold and wet environment, and then trudge by foot, boat and horseback all the way down the journey you had just traced.

This legislation calls for the Park Service to work collaboratively with the States of Oregon and Washington, the Indian tribes and the others in the local communities on the expansion of Fort Clatsop and a study including new sites before the start of the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition which is planned to take place between 2003 and 2006.

Companion legislation has already passed the Senate. I want to thank our Senate colleagues in both Oregon and Washington for their leadership. I want to thank the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU) for his leadership, and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) and the committee chair and the ranking member.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage passage for this important piece of legislation.

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my good friend and colleague from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) for his work and especially for pointing out this signal election and these early, wise westerners who, I must point out for the record, voted to go to Oregon as so many others have.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILL).

□ 1730

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of H.R. 2643, the Fort Clatsop National Memorial Expansion Act of 2002. I urge its adoption.

I became interested in this bill because the people I represent in Clarks-ville, Indiana, and the other communities surrounding the Falls of the Ohio have a unique connection to Fort Clatsop and nearby Station Camp in the State of Washington.

In October 1803, Lewis and Clark first met at the Falls of the Ohio, recruited the first members of the Corps of Discovery and departed for the West from Clarks-ville, Indiana, later that same month. It then took more than the 2 years for the Corps of Discovery to reach the Pacific Ocean nearby present-day McGowan, Washington.

As many know, our country will begin commemorating the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition next year. Both the Falls of the Ohio and the lower Columbia region surrounding Fort Clatsop will host national signature events to mark important moments in the journey.

Mr. Speaker, the upcoming bicentennial has caused many of us to more carefully examine the history of the Lewis and Clark expedition. In doing so, we have discovered many more important sites, like the Falls of the Ohio and Station Camp, Washington, that have not been properly recognized in the past. The Falls of the Ohio has now been certified by the National Park Service as an official site associated with the Lewis and Clark national historic trail.

I hope the National Park Service will quickly perform the feasibility study required by this bill to add the Washington State sites to the Fort Clatsop national memorial.

In closing, let me join President Bush in urging all Americans to observe the Lewis and Clark bicentennial and participate in activities to honor the achievement of this important expedition.

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would be remiss if I did not mention two additional individuals in closing and that is Cindy Orlando, former superintendent of Fort Clatsop National Memorial, who was superintendent of the memorial for a long time and worked on many aspects of this memorial, including this expansion. I would also like to recognize the current superintendent, Don Stryker, who is moving on to Mt. Rushmore. He will be getting a little bit more granite, but no more spectacular scenery than he has had at Fort Clatsop.

Don has been terrific in working with the park service, with the committee and with us in bringing this bill forward; and I would just like to share a moment when Don provided us with an opportunity to be at Fort Clatsop after sundown, and under the growing shadows and with a roaring campfire nearby, it was very easy to imagine what it would be like to go back 200 years to experience what the explorers experienced. It is also difficult to imagine what they had to endure to get there.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD).

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to add also that another individual who has worked tremendously hard on this is Dave Micandri, head of the Washington State Historical Society. It was his vision and persistence and tireless effort to make sure Station Camp was included in this legislation. He has done a marvelous job, and I also want to commend the good people of Long Beach and Ilwaco, Washington, who have worked tirelessly to ensure that their part of the story gets told, along with the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).
